Catarrh in the Head

Is a dangerous disease because it is liable to result in loss of hearing or smell, or develop into consumption. Read the following:

"My wife has been a sufferer from catarrh for the past four years and the disease had gone so far that her eyesight was affected so that for nearly a year she was unable to read for more than five minutes at a time. She suffered severe pains in the head and at times was almost distracted. About Christmas, she commenced taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and since that time has steadily improved. She has taken six bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla and is on the road to a complete cure. I cannot speak too highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I cheerfully recommend it." W. H. NAPOLEON A CAPTIVE.

The Little Room in Which He First Met Emperor William and Bismarck.

The third Napoleon, chief of a mushroom empire founded on force and fraud, and doomed to be crushed out as swiftly and suddenly as it had arisen, was never a sovereign worthy of respect and did not deserve sympathy in his fall. Nevertheless, in reading such pictures of his overthrow as that given not long since in Archibald Forbes' article, "After Sedan," it is impossible not to pity the shamed and suffering man, already in the grip of the disease which killed him, disappointment in every hope, and breaking into helpless tears at the moment of encountering his conqueror, the Emperor of Germany.

The German Emperor showed him every kindness, but his meeting a little later with his other powerful enemy, Bismarck, that bluff and determined man of action, while outwardly deferential, was less tender of the captive's feeling. They held their interview in a weaver's cottage near the battlefield, and the weaver's widow, Mme. Fournaise, related to Mr. Forbes her recollections of the event.

Bismarck, roughly dressed, passed through her room to join the fallen Emperor in a room beyond. They talked awhile in low tones. Then the German left the room abruptly and ran clattering down the breakneck stairs, regardless of her warnings that he would trip. His face was stern. She waited a few moments, and then entering the room found the Emperor with his face hidden in his hands and his elbows on the table. She asked him if there was any service she could render him. He answered:

"Only to pull down the blinds."

She did so and then stole away. An hour later Bismarck returned in full uniform, saw the Emperor again, and after a short talk, accompanied him down the rickety stairs and out at the door, ushering him with some show of deference. On the threshold the Emperor gave his hostess four napoleons, saying as he did so, in a broken voice:

"This hospitality of yours is, perhaps, the last I shall ever receive in France."

Mme. Fournaise, though sympathetic and patriotic, was poor, and she confessed quite frankly to Mr. Forbes the profits she had made by the sale of relics of the historic meeting. To Bismarck himself she sold, after some sharp bargaining, the table at which the two had sat; to General Sheridan, who had been a spectator of the battle of Sedan, one of the chairs, and to Sir Beauchamp Walker, an Englishman, another.

These was the true and actual relics, but she also confessed to selling, mostly to Americans, relay after relay of straw-bottomed chairs of the same pattern and supposed by these purchasers to be the veritable ones in which the fallen Emperor and Bismarck had sat. She had, however, some conscience in the matter of such sales, although she drew the line at sentiment—not principle.

When Mr. Forbes asked, laughingly, if she had not also sold and resold the four napoleons, she exclaimed greatly shocked:

"Oh, Mon Dieu, no, never, never! Did he not give them to me with his own hand? See, the original four are there in that locked case on the mantel with the glass top. Yes, I have had great offers for them. Over and over again I could have had 500 francs for the four pieces, but no money would tempt me to sell them."

Passing yet again by Sedan several years afterward Archibald Forbes inquired once more for Mme. Fournaise. But the weaver's cottage was empty and locked fast, and its late owner lay in the churchyard, her place of rest and her funeral expenses paid for, as on her deathbed she had directed, by the precious four Napoleons given her in acknowledgment of the last hospitality he should ever receive in his own country by the outcast Emperor of France.—Youth's Companion.

The Passing of Pugilism.

It is announced with all the gravity and solemnity that should be part of such an important event that the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight has been declared "off"—finally and forever. There is no guarantee that a windy war of words will not continue for months to come, or that there will not be a street brawl between the two bruisers, but it is reasonably certain that they will not pummel each other in public for a money stake in any part of the United States. This inglorious ending of this much-talked-about test of physical prowess marks the passing of the prize fighter and his degrading sport. It is doubtful whether another encounter of the kind will ever take place in any State in the Union. The pugilists and their managers have been put to a vast deal of trouble and expense to bring off the encounter, and their failure is significant. The time was when New York was the Mecca for these exhibitions but New York determined to be disgraced no longer, and interdicted the so-called "sport." This wholesome example has been followed from Maine to California, and Legislatures in several States where the laws against prize fighting were defective have had their statutes amended, so that where it would have been possible five years ago to have arranged a pugilistic encounter in a dozen different places, without any interference on the part of the authorities, it would not be possible to-day in any State or Territory. The stamp or public disapproval has taken the pugilists' vocation away from him. Instead of the dictum "The prize fighter must go," we are prepared to say, "The prize fighter has gone."—New York Mail and Express.

An Arctic Rhinoceros.

A gigantic specimen of the Arctic rhinoceros has lately been discovered frozen up in an iceberg which stranded at the Lena Delta. This specimen was seven feet taller than the largest variety of the rhinocerous of to-day and was armed with two nose horns, the shortest of which was three feet and two inches in length. The animal doubtless belonged to an antediluvian species of rhinoceri, and his immense size gives some idea of the enormous and terrible beasts which inhabited this planet in the "days when the earth was young." The creature's body was entirely covered with very long, thick hair, which proves that the Arctic regions were his natural habitat.

Now Backache.

There is only one kind.

And there is only one cure.

So don,t expect to escape or recover until you have used the cure.

Backache always results from trouble or ailment in the kidneys.

Now, the cure is Dodd's Kidney Pills.

It is wonderful how much backache means.

It is not a violent pain—no match for toothache, nor even a corn.

But it means a great deal.

Nearly always it is proceeded by a cold

The circulation of the blood is checked right at the kidneys in such a case.

Take one of the worst and most fatal kidney diseases—Bright's.

The doctor shakes his head and says it is incurable.

This disease is essentially an inflammation of the kidneys.

The blood is checked, or dammed up, right in the kidneys themselves.

Still the heart keeps pumping away against the obstruction caused by congestion or inflamation.

We are not taking about the heart just now, but sometimes it fails at such a uncture.

What does it all mean?

It means that by this extra pressure on the walls of the blood vessels, watery particles ooze through. This accumulated water is the condition called dropsy.

It means a breaking down of the tissues of the kidneys, and then the doctors retire or send the patient away somewhere to die.

Or it means the passage of a great part of the blood unfiltered to do harm at the weakest spot.

Is there still hope?

Yes.

The hope—the only hope of such a patient—is Dodd's Kidney Pills.

And they always cure.

A HEAVY MORTGAGE.

How a prominent farmer quickly lifted it.

A mortgage has been described as an incentive to industry, a heavy mortgage, as a sure sign o ruin. The last is particularly true, for if a mortgage is allowed to run it will eat up the farm. In this connection Mr. Henry Fowler, of Huron writes: "From my boyhood scrofula had marked me for a victim and it seemed as if it had a life mortgage on my blood. I suffered fearfully with sores, and knowing my condition I have remained a single man. Doctor after doctor prescribed for me, and finally a Toronto specialist told me bluntly that my complaint was a deep-seated, incurable, blood disease. Sarsaparilla I knew was a good blood medicine, and I sent for a bottle of the best. Mr. Todd, the druggist, sent me Scott's Sarsaparilla, and I have stuck to it. It has lifted my mortgage, for to-day I am free from those horrible sores, my eyesight is not blurred, my tongue is not furry, and I have no irritation. I look upon Scott's Sarsaparilla as a marvellous medicine when it will cure a life long disease in so short a time."

Scrofula, pimples, running sores, rheumatism and all diseases generated by poisonous humors in the blood are cured by Scott's Sarsaparilla. The kind that cures. Sold only in concentrated form at $1 per bottle by your druggist. Dose from half to one teaspoonful.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

Recent Discoveries and Inventions in the Arts and Sciences.

At one of the sittings of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at Springfield the other day the geologists met with the anthropologists to discuss some important papers, and especially the much anticipated chert implement from the Ohio glacial gravel.

This new evidence of glacial man presented by Prof. G. F. Wright consisted of a chert implement one and three quarter inches long and three quarters of an inch broad, which had very clearly been chipped to an edge all around. This was found by Sam Huston of Steubenville, Ohio, at Brilliant, eight miles below his residence. Mr. Huston is a graduate of the scientific department of Washington and Jefferson College, and for 25 years has been the County Surveyor of Jefferson County, Ohio, and is thus perfectly conversant with all the natural features of the region, and especially with the gravel deposits which are extensively used in road making. He discovered for Samuel H. Scudder of Boston the fossil insects in the coal strata of Ohio, and so is well known to scientific men.

The implement in question was seen by Mr. Huston projecting from the freshly marked face of terrace gravel about eight feet below the surface, and about 50 feet above the Ohio River, and was taken out with his own hands. The gravel was fine, and the bedding and cross bedding above and below it was perfectly distinct and undisturbed, so that the implement is as old as the deposition of the gravel.

Prof. Wright has visited the place with Mr. Huston and says that no one will question that it is of the same age of the gravels at Trenton, N. J., and in the valley of the Somme in France, where similar discoveries have been made. These terraces correspond closely in age to the terraces along the Connecticut, of which that where the armory in Springfield stands is a good example. They mark the so-called Champlain epoch of Dana, and were formed near the close of the glacial period. At this stage of inquiry there should be nothing strange, Prof. Wright said, in finding such evidence, for it is abundant in France and Southern England; while Dr. Abbott's numerous discoveries at Trenton, N. J., are of the same age. This is especially significant at the present time because of reported discoveries. It has thus great cumulative force. This is now the third locality in Ohio where similar discoveries have been made and well attested by competent observers, the other two being at Madisonville by Dr. Metz; at Newcomerstown by M. C. Mills. Thus more and more closely does it become evident that the study of the glacial period is an essential preliminary to the study of human history.

The first comment upon the find was the permanent secretary, Mr. Putnam, who came on the platform gingerly bearing the precious relic in a hat, and it may be that there was a shade of admonition in the little lecture which he gave as to the necessity of keeping hands off such treasures. However that may be, Prof. Wright took the opportunity to explain that it had been brought carefully wrapped in tissue paper. Many were surprised by Mr. Putnam's statement that after it had been passed from hand to hand by the people in the room its archaeological value would be gone. At present there was a peculiar polish which spoke of great antiquity, and it ought never to be touched, except when it is to be examined with a microscope or on some such great occasion. The swiftness with which he formed an expert opinion seemed miraculous to the listeners. Further comments were made by Dr. Spencer, who thought the gravel where this chert was found older than the Trenton glacial gravels; by Dr. Halliburton, who distrusted all finds in the drift; and Prof. Coue, who illustrated by comparison with Pacific Coast discoveries.

At the conclusion of this discussion the regular programme for the afternoon was taken up, the first paper being a study in folk lore, "The spider goddess and the demon mare," by F. H. Cushing, the greater part of which was filled with a singular poetic Indian legend, which it is quite impossible to reproduce in small compass.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Achievements of Science.

The whaleback steamer recently launched on the Pacific Coast is the largest ever built. It will run between San Francisco and Panama.

Andrew Keiser, train dispatcher on a Pittsburg railroad, has invented an appliance by which any engineer upon a locomotive can close an open switch at once should he by any chance run into one. This is done by a simple device on the locomotive, and a special construction of the switch itself, one engaging with the other at the will of the engineer.

In New Zealand water power is used for generating an electric current, which is employed in dredging for gold in the River Shotover, about 25 miles from Queenstown. The cost of the plant was £35,000, the cost per week of the entire plant is $175. The result is 50 cubic feet of material dredged per hour from a depth of 20 feet. It has now been running successfully for three years.

It is now claimed that smoke never issues from volcanoes, nor are there flames from the same source. The red light seen above the volcano is the glow of molten lava reflected on the under side of the clouds of dust. The clouds of dust are never mixed with smoke. There are, it is true, bursts of steam sometimes, but rocks do not burn as coal or wood and give off the finely divided carbon which we know as smoke.

The French Government has a scheme under consideration for utilizing the water power of the Seine for the production of electricity at the exhibition of 1900, and for commercial distribution of the current permanently. There are upward of 20 weirs from which power could be derived. At Suresnes there is an available fall of 19 feet. Suresnes is but a trifle over six miles from the Champ de Mars. The estimated power available is 1800 horse-power, which should result in an effective transmission of 1300 horse-power to the exhibition site. It is argued that the employment of the water power would not impede navigation, while the cost of the utilization will not be excessive.

PROTECTION from the grip, pneumonia, diphtheria, fever and epidemics is given by Hood's Sarsaparilla. It makes PURE BLOOD.
