BURGESS BEDTIME

Continued from page 7

"What isn't big enough?" asked Peter.

"That hole," replied Mrs. Possum. "It isn't big enough for me and mah family."

Then she turned her back and walked off with the ten little hangers-on enjoying the ride. She whined fretfully. To have heard her you might have thought nothing in the world could please her more than to lose part of that big family, when all the time she was worrying for fear one or more of those little hangers-on might fall off and she not know it. That is the way with mother love. There is nothing to equal it.

Unc' Billy Possum watched them out of sight. Then he climbed up to the big hollow Logcock had cut in that tree. He curled up in it. Being alone it was big enough. He would take a nap.
