Miss Flossie Dunn of Summerville, is spending a few days visiting friends in Montague.

Miss Mary Matheson, radiology technician at the Ottawa Civic Hospital, spent the week-end visiting her aunt, Mrs. James Shaw, and her uncle, Mr. Bruce MacPhee, at Montague. She is spending a holiday with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Angus Matheson, Glen Williams.

Bristol and Vicinity

Miss Imelda Rossiter, who was attending P.W.C. for the second year, recently left for Halifax, N.S.

Mrs. W. T. Coffin, who had the misfortune to fall and fracture her leg two weeks ago at Marie Church, has arrived home from the hospital but will have her leg in a cast for three months at least.

The sincere sympathy of this vicinity is being extended to Mrs. Lillie Corrigan and her brothers in the recent passing of their mother, Mrs. W. O. Davey. Mrs. Davey was well-known here as her husband, the late Conductor Davey, was a Bristol man and his family spent many summers here.

Miss Teresa Rossiter, who gave up school teaching a year ago to enter the firm of Rogers Hardware in Charlottetown, is home at present, having resigned her position. She will go back to the school desk as a teacher at Spring Park School in the city. Another of our young teachers, Miss Mary McInnis, turned her back on the school desk a year ago to take a position in one of the city stores, and today is back teaching at the business college in the city.

We believe we have a teacher here with more years of service behind the desk than any other country teacher. She is Miss Mabel O'Brien who had been teaching for more than twenty-five years without a break. Taking up teaching after finishing college, she has never missed a term. Even when teachers were so plentiful they begged for schools, she was in demand and turned down offers from Summerside and other big districts to remain near home. President of the Teachers Federation, she holds the honor of being one of the few who shook hands with the new Queen Elizabeth when she and her husband were here last fall.

Miss Aphra Wismer, Charlottetown, was a recent visitor to Montague, guest of Mr. and Mrs. Lester MacLeod.

Roads Opened In King's Co. Area

Snow plow crews at Montague announced that the road between Montague and Charlottetown had been opened for traffic about 4 p.m. yesterday. By that time roads had also been opened between Montague and Murray River and Murray Harbor, Montague and Georgetown, Cardigan, Fortune, Dundas and Annandale.

It was understood that plow crews would work through the night widening cuttings and generally improving conditions. It was not known early in the night just what result the drifting, which continued into the night, would have on the roads. However, it was expected in Montague that travelling would still be possible this morning.

He was married three times. His third wife, the former Clara Robertson of Montague, survives. He married first, Katie Martin of Queen's Road, while his second wife was Velma MacLeod of Uigg.

In addition to his widow, survivors include a daughter from his second marriage, Mimi, Mrs. G. H. Myers of Brudenell, and one sister, Miss Tilly Rourke, Montague.

Further Hints On Woodlot Management

In a further discussion of the proper management of woodlots in this Province Mr. Frank Gaudet, Chief Forester, Department of Industry and Natural Resources, said a woodlot should produce as much wood of as high a quality as it continuously can, if it is to render the utmost benefit to its owners. Mr. Gaudet mentioned five principal ways in which this can be accomplished. He said to produce the most wood the following were needed:

The woodland must be well stocked with desirable species. Every piece of ground intended for growing trees should be growing them. Blank spaces in a woodlot, such as alder barrens and clear-cut areas are like holes in its owner's pockets. The holes in money is being lost all the time. All trees on the woodlot must have the proper spacing between them. An area of woodland will put on the greatest amount of wood in a year if there is neither too much nor too little spacing between them, and neither too few nor too many trees.

The faster the trees grow in a woodlot, the more wood and money the woodlot will yield. Under proper management a woodlot will grow many times as fast as a neglected one. It has been found out through experiments that in badly neglected woodlots the loss of wood through over-cutting and rot is often greater than the growth. Such a woodlot cannot possibly survive.

The healthier a woodlot is the better will be the growth. Protection from fire and grazing animals is very important. Diseased and insect-infested trees should be removed as quickly as possible.

Good prompt restocking after cutting is a prime necessity. Too often this is not even taken into consideration. The way the woodlot is cut influences natural restocking. Too often areas are stripped of trees. The result of such a practice is that the land becomes covered by worthless scrubs and stays unproductive for a great number of years or only a few scattered trees may grow. But, if woodlots are cut under some selective plan where small openings are made, fast growth can begin at once from the seed of the trees that are left standing. The land will then produce better and steeper tree growth. A greater amount of wood per acre per year will then be produced. If a woodlot is managed properly on a "sustained yield" basis, mature trees can be cut year after year and yet there will be as much or more wood on the woodlot as there was at the start. Sustained yields means that the loss of wood through cutting and rot in a year should balance the growth that is put on in a year. Young and middle-aged trees grow rapidly, but old trees stop growing then die and decay. Old trees should be cut and used, but young trees should be left and protected until they grow up.
