

Oil Flow In Backyard Gives Steady Income

LOS ANGELES (AP)—For months Rodion Slipyj's biggest problem was the oil in his backyard.

He doesn't have the problem now. Slipyj may be the only back yard oilman in Los Angeles.

Each Saturday a truck hauls 2,000 gallons of quality crude oil from his yard.

It nets $500 a month for Slipyj (pronounced slippage), a mechanical engineer.

"I am sitting on top of an infinite pool," says the 52-year-old engineer. He said his home rests on a fault from which the oil springs.

Last year at this time Slipyj and his wife Anne were wishing they would wake up and find that seepage in their yard had disappeared.

Now, said Mrs. Slipyj, "we're glad our wish never came true."

Nothing would grow in their are two pipes: one in which to dip a measuring stick to see how much oil is on hand, another from which to siphon the oil.

The smell is gone. So are the oil puddles.

All he and his wife have to do is keep track of the gallons of crude oil hauled away each week—and deposit the royalty cheques in the bank.

MARLBOROUGH, England (CP)—The local council of this Wiltshire town has banned a road safety poster because it believes the dramatic design do might distract drivers and cause accidents.
