Morell, St. Peter's Bay, &c.

Far off from the smoke and the city's glare,
To the sweet-scented grassy lea;
From the din and dust to the healthful air
And the song of a summer sea.

Off on the P. E. Island Railway; off on the good car Summerside; on through the densely crowded woodland; on o'er the open expanse; whilst the great locomotive belches forth its dusky cloud athwart the spotless azure; or loud-shrieking, startles into momentary life the quiet, wayside villagers; on to the little hamlet which betokens the far-stretching district of Morell.
Though contending with disadvantages, Morell has made good progress within the last decade. The forest is receding before the inroads of industry, and the crops, despite the recent unfavorable weather, give promise of a fair return. Some of our party proved successful at the fishing-trout, and although at this season the trout are difficult to capture, we were now and again regaled with some fine-looking specimens. It is encouraging to find that some of our farmers in this neighborhood seem to think as well as to labor. One place, in particular, impressed us as a good model for those of our country people who complain that there is no money to be got out of farming. A tidy little, well-finished house, enclosed garden, nest henry, and some good cows prepared us for the information imparted by the young housewife. "We have already sold, this summer, over sixty dollars' worth of butter and eggs." Now, what a worthy captain in the next country beg to dine into our ears, we would respectfully beg to apply in this connection to the farmers of P. E. Island, who, it is hoped, will take the suggestion in as good part as did we juveniles in the merry days of Lang Syne. "Concentrate your affections, girls," said the jolly old sage; "concentrate your affections upon one deserving person, and not go flitting hither and thither; it doesn't pay." So say we to our brothers and sisters of the soil: Concentrate, like the farmer we have just instanced, your affections, i. e. your energies. Do not waste over-much time upon cropping the unmanured outskirts of your land, but save a little for the better fertilizing of the nearby part, and for assisting the too often over-worked house-wife, by erecting a suitable place for the hens, instead of scolding them out of the grain into the shelter of the woods. For protection from their formidable enemy, the hawk, an awning of old fishing net would suffice. The horses in the country around Morell are of good size, and the cattle improving. It may suit for a barren, mountainous region to rear a dwarfish class of cows, but in this Province of pasture land it is time and labor mis-directed.
Reaching Souris upon the eve of a mighty storm, the prospect was not inviting. Still, as the clouds cleared away, we could realize how very beautiful the ocean-wild view would appear in more reasonable weather. The genial and popular Collector of Customs, Mr. M. J. Foley, kindly escorted us to a good hotel, and by his courteous attention rendered our short stay in the place very agreeable. Quite a number of vessels had sought shelter from the storm inside the fine breakwater; and we parted from view of them with the hope that more propitious weather would smile upon their efforts to bring the hitherto unsuccessful fishing season to a fortunate finale. To our mind the brisk little Souris, with its several good warehouses and its semi-active population, assumes the appearance of what is termed in Scotland, a thriving "country town."

St. Peter's Bay with its fine church upon the brow of the hill, its lengthy and substantial looking bridge, and its few lively stores, is the mercantile centre of a wide spread district. The picturesque Bay, with its beautiful surroundings, is not easily to be out-rivalled; and as with restful eyes we gaze upon its placid waters, leaving those peaceful shores, whereon were never strewn a wreck, our thoughts float onward to that blissful day when there shall be no more friend-separating, life-quenching, relentless cruel sea; when the wild, fitful surges of time will be bounded by the unceasing calm of eternity.
During our sojourn, and upon our journey either way, we met with many familiar faces, young and old; notably with one whose untiring energy in the furtherance of great undertakings under his own immediate supervision, has proved him to be specially gifted for the high and confidential position which he occupies; whilst his genial aspect and noble bearing, unstained by mere assumption of dignity, exercises not only a halloving effect, but also tends to commend to outsiders the great cause for which he labors. I refer to His Lordship Bishop McIntyre. By him we were introduced to Rev. A. J. McIntyre, who, it will be remembered, during the dark night of the winter of his healthful youth, into the pestilential house of death. In appearance Mr. McIntyre resembles the late lamented Captain Hedley Vicar, of Criseman fame, whose brave young life was offered up at the shrine of duty. Hero of the blood-red battlefield, in the annals of a grateful country is inscribed his honored name! Hero of the plague-stricken hospital, thy name is enrolled, where thy reward awaiteth thee, in the everlasting Heavens.
In closing this imperfect sketch we would desire to bear cheerful testimony to the polite attention rendered travellers by the various employes of the P. E. I. Railway, particularly by the popular conductors, Messrs. McDonald and McKie, the latter of whom, as a faithful servant of the railway company since its opening, is well worthy of some special recognition.
The many who objected to the presence of a railway on this Island, must now accede that it is, if not an actual necessity, at least a valuable boon, affording, as it does, a rapid and cheap mode of travelling, and a far more complete mode of transit for merchandise than did the system of old. Much of the bitterness and strife of earth is caused by non-understanding, the fruit of non-acquaintance. Steam on the ocean has spanned, as by a bridge, the mighty deep, and has brought peoples and continents near to each other; but it is reserved for steam on the land to complete the work of the world's advance, by drawing communities and individuals into close relationship, and thus be an agent in hastening on that holier, happier day, when the dark discords of ignorance and miseries of vice shall vanish before the rising sun of enlightenment, love and peace.

S. MACLEOD.

North River Sunday School Picnic.

THE North River Sunday School held its annual Picnic on the 29th inst. The clouds of the previous fortnight had gathered up their dripping skirts, and left a sky of dappled azure to smile on the joy of a youthful holiday. A broad pasture on the farm of William Cummings, Esq., purpled with the ripened panicles of silky Agrostes, was the well chosen ground for the gathering. A beautiful grove of maples on its western border afforded shade and shelter beneath the whispering canopy of its silver-lined foliage. At 2 o'clock, the farmers' waggons began to arrive, bearing the joyous burdens of rosy children, gay in their holiday attire. Soon the broad glebe swarmed with nimble-footed scouts at base ball, and groups at other athletic games. The great trees swayed with the weight of oscillating swings, and the wood rang with the glad voice of childhood's glee, while quieter groups wandered wide through the beauty of groves and spangled lea.
The tables were laid under the green-wood shadows, where the winds sang anthems to the boughs, and the sweet-voiced warbler soiced her young. Revd. Mr. Burr invoked a blessing, and the crowds of hearty children quickly delighted their mammies in the expedition with which they made the delicacies prepared for them vanish from the board. Following them, the teachers, parents and visitors enjoyed the tempting repast, and social kindness and pleasant, and intellectual converse in the free temple of nature, amid sunshine and shadows, laughing breeze and echoing boughs. A passing cloud swept a light rain shower over the scene, but it was insufficient to damp feather mirth or enjoyment, and any momentary depressions vanished quicker than the snowy vapor on the blue. There was an hour more for exhilarating games, and the quiet charms of society, and mirth, and youth's dear, witching blandishments, toned by christian constraint. Then the company broke up, bearing away with them the memory of a day of pure, social enjoyment in connection with the exalted work of youthful improvement and sacred instruction.

Religious Notes.

The Pan-Anglican Synod received an address from 400 lay and clerical members of the Church of England deploring the departure, unauthorized by law, which has been adopted by many individuals in the the Church of England toward the doctrines and teachings of the Church of Rome.

A great emigration of Syrians to other lands is in progress. Upwards of 10,000 have left the Pashalic of Mount Lebanon alone in the past few years, going to Australia, South America and the United States. The Turkish Government has tried in vain to prevent the exodus, which is caused by the hard conditions of life in Syria—bad roads and lack of protection from the Government. The emigrants are not Moslems.

The Pope has at last drawn on the Papal Guaranty Fund, established by the Italian Government in 1871. By this fund the Pope was to receive an annual grant of $600,000. Pius IX would not touch it, but Leo XIII has been driven, it would seem, by financial exigency to draw on it. As to the attitude of the Government toward the Vatican we have the following from a recent speech of Premier Crispien:—

"We are prepared to make the concessions demanded by the Church, but not just yet—not, in fact, until the Vatican raises its voice to bless our Italy, instead of cursing it as hitherto; not till the Holy See assumes an attitude toward us which is at once kindly, peaceful and human, and abandons that of disguised antagonism, which has characterized it until now."

It seems that the British public has just had a "beer boom." The Christian Commonwealth comments on it with great severity. It charges that the Allosops, the famous brewers, were guilty of a fraud in issuing their prospectus recently, offering a large amount of very profitable stock in their immense business. Purchasers were numerous and greedy. The stock was regarded as a good thing.

"With astounding alacrity, as uncontradicted reports declared, even many of the clergy rushed in among the crowd of applicants, and much of the drunkard-making stock was bought up by the representatives of the Churches."

For the first six months 8 per cent. was paid; for the second six months only 6 per cent. and now the reserve is said to be only $6,000, and the stockholders complain that they have been deceived and that beer is a bad thing after all.

American culture may not, in the mass, reach the height or depth of that of the older civilizations of Europe, but that such as we have is well diffused is a fact newly emphasized by the assignment of topics for the approaching meeting of the National Editorial Association. Texas is to discuss the influence of the press on public morals; Dakota, business methods in journalism; Iowa, the editorial article; Alabama, the independent press; Pennsylvania, humor in newspaper work; Louisiana, poetry; New York, the relations of the metropolitan and provincial presses; Ohio, newspaper legislation; Michigan, the law of libel; and Massachusetts and Georgia, sectionalism. It is characteristic of the profession and habits of the members of the convention that each topic is to be disposed of within a limit of twenty minutes.—Printers' Ink.
