

MUTUAL LEADERS HONORED

C. O. ELLIS

W. C. LECKY

C. E. F. STOKOE

The Mutual Life of Canada has released its Honors List, recognizing three members of its Charlottetown Branch for outstanding service to their communities in the club year recently closed.

Qualification for club membership requires not only the underwriting of a large volume of protection, but, more important, the writing from year to year of "quality" business, that is, life insurance that is continued in force.

Marrying Mark

By VIOLETTE KIMBALL DUNN

Continued

Ten couples were asked for dinner and dancing Thanksgiving night. Valerie invited Shirley too, but she declined, saying she didn't believe in too many adults at a children's party.

Lucy was all for putting in a quiet evening in her own rooms, but Valerie's disappointment and Mark's dismay were so real that she changed her mind. If she felt any embarrassment over her position, nobody knew it.

She and Mark had their dinner at a small table before the library fire. Valerie quailed a bit at the idea of being left alone with a dinner party, but Mark and Lucy told her she might as well begin her apprenticeship as a hostess.

As she grew used to the idea, she began to enjoy it. Mark received the youngsters who overflowed the place. The house was fulfilling itself for the first time, he thought, with a twinge at his disloyalty.

Lucy by the library fire. The contrast between the laughing young mob he had left and golden-haired Lucy in her peacock-colored frock, waiting in the quiet room struck him so that he stopped in the doorway to enjoy it.

He detached himself from the domesticity he had come to take so happily for granted, and looked at the scene as a stranger might. Lucy glanced up and caught the slight self-consciousness with which he came toward her.

"What a lot of trouble you've taken, and what a peach you are about it! How are we going to say 'Thanks?'"

Lucy only smiled. It seemed impossible he didn't realize how she felt about it all. "You haven't learned how easy it is to spend other people's money," she reminded him. "That's really about all I did."

"That, and using up your time and energy, to say nothing of your gains to think it all up. You don't imagine I could have pulled it off alone? Money is the easiest part of it."

"You think so because you've never been without it," said Lucy. She sent up a little prayer that he would never be. Although it was hard for her to think of Mark as beaten, or placed in any circumstances where he couldn't find a way out if he wanted it.

She would back him all the way, she thought. It seemed as if he must know how she felt about him, even though she tried so hard to hide it. Life was not going to be simple if thought were ever made visible!

Mark and Lucy were just finishing their coffee, with a very special old liqueur in honor of the day, when to their dismay, the draperies at the library door were pushed aside to reveal Elise in a slim black velvet, a white ermine cloak off her very bare shoulders.

"So there you are," she said at last. Her voice broke a little shrilly as she came into the room.

Mark got to his feet. He did a mental leap after his vanishing sense of hospitality. The woman was in his house. Since she had met him at the factory gates, Wide Acres had been mercifully free of Elise. As a matter of fact, he had almost completely forgotten her.

She barely nodded to Lucy, who could scarcely believe that she was there. She slipped out of her coat and draped herself over a nearby chair. Her glance rested first on Mark, then Lucy, and last on the small table sitting so cozily by the fire.

"What a domestic scene," she said.

"Isn't it?" agreed Mark amiably. He had been thinking the same thing just before she came in, only he hadn't given it a name.

"I hope I'm not too terribly in the way," she went on wistfully. "I never dreamed you'd be entertaining. I just felt so lonely on this dear home day, I longed for a glimpse of something real."

Lucy wondered suddenly why it should be Shirley who went in for novel writing.

"Of course I'm frightfully embarrassed," Elise seemed to be doing all the talking. "Dashing in on a party where I wasn't invited. But I never dreamed—with dear Ellen gone, and all—"

Cherry Valley WMS Observes 60th Anniversary

Cherry Valley United Church was filled to capacity on Sunday evening last when the Women's Missionary Society of the church observed its sixtieth anniversary.

An inspiring sermon was preached by the pastor, Rev. John F. MacKay. Assisting in the service was Rev. L. M. Murray of Kensington.

The Brooklyn Trio were heard in several fine selections and Archie Hume of Montague contributed a number of violin selections which were greatly appreciated.

The following sketch of the Society's history was read by Mrs. Harold Smith of Pownal: On Sunday morning, June 29, 1890, at a meeting held in the Methodist Church, Cherry Valley, the origin and work of the Women's Missionary Society was brought before those present by Mrs. Johnson, Vice President of M. B. and P. E. I. Branch, and organizer for P. E. I. The W. M. S. had been organized in 1881 upon request of the missionaries in Japan who saw that in that land women could do more effective work among the women there.

The first missionary sent out by this Society was Miss Cartwell who went out in 1882.

Mrs. Johnson spoke of the importance of the work, the open doors of opportunity, the privilege of being "co-workers together with God" in bringing those so long in heathen darkness into the light and liberty of the children of God, and the duty binding upon us who live in Christian lands to obey the Saviour's last command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

Mrs. Jones of Pownal then spoke of the benefit to the home church. She told of how much it had done for the women of Pownal in drawing them closer together, and to Christ, of how their hearts had been enlarged, and of the joy it is to be working for Christ.

It was then moved by Mrs. James Irving, seconded by Mrs. F. M. S. to be organized at Cherry Valley. The following officers were elected:

President — Mrs. Robert Ings. 1st Vice-President — Mrs. William Jenkins. 2nd Vice-President — Mrs. James Irving. Recording Secretary — Mrs. Benjamin Mutch.

Russians Plan Red Square in Berlin

BERLIN, Sept. 8—(AP)—East Berlin's Communists today began raising one of the city's most famous landmarks—the war-ruined Imperial Castle—to make room for a big Moscow-style red square. An anguished howl went up from anti-communist West Berliners—who demanded that the castle be preserved and eventually reconstructed as an enduring link with what Germans like to call their "herrliche Zeiten" (glorious times).

was the same way with Yowler the Bobcat, Old Man Coyote and Tuffy the Lynx. Any of them could have killed the little Porcupine as easily as a boy or a girl kills a fly, but none of them even tried to. It was all on account of those spears, the quills with which Little Porky was prepared to defend himself.

Now and then Little Porky met his Mother and they touched noses. That is the Porcupine way of greeting. That is all they had to do with one another. Each was completely free and independent, and all because each was so well prepared. What a pity that every one isn't at all times prepared.

Treasurer — Miss Sarah Irving. Corresponding Secretary — Miss Mary Hayden.

The following were also members: Mrs. Francis Mutch, Miss Mary Jenkins, Miss Jennie Jenkins and Miss Gemma Irving.

Mrs. Benjamin Mutch was President for 26 years and she made forty-two life members of whom there are thirteen in our Society at the present time; there are also seven Annual members. Following is a list of the Presidents during the sixty years — Mrs. Robert Ings, Mrs. William Jenkins, Mrs. James Irving, Mrs. Benjamin Mutch, Mrs. Alex MacPhee, Mrs. W. J. MacEachern who was twice President. Mrs. Trueman Jenkins, Mrs. Furness Matheson, Mrs. Houghton Mutch, Mrs. Gemma Irving. Mrs. J. E. MacEachern who was also President twice. Many members have moved away, and many have passed to the Great Beyond. The memory of these dear women is very sweet, their devotion to duty, their helpfulness will always be remembered. Those who have moved to other places are also missed. Some younger members are very fine and splendid workers, and are helping to keep the society up to do her part in bringing the Bread of Life to those in heathen

The National Cancer Institute of Canada has undertaken a programme of research which is one of the greatest in the conquest of a single disease. Since the war one million dollars has been wisely spent on the various Cancer research projects throughout Canada. An unrelenting quest is now being carried on all across Canada for the cause and cure of Cancer and some of the nation's most brilliant scientists are trying to solve one of the medical profession's most defiant riddles. RESEARCH into the CAUSE AND CURE OF CANCER has brought new knowledge, new weapons with which to work and the hope of victory within our time. Your generous support has made possible the continuance of 61 separate cancer research projects in Canada. PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION — 14,000 Canadian Doctors are being kept abreast of current progress in Cancer diagnosis and treatment through the media of professional films, brochures and slides. PROFESSIONAL TRAINING — Funds of the Society have made possible postgraduate training and refresher courses for 67 Canadian Doctors and technicians, resulting in higher standards of the diagnosis and treatment of Cancer. There remains a serious shortage of trained personnel. Prince Edward Island will benefit by the extra training of these Cancer Specialists. The Canadian Cancer Society is the fund-raising body for the National Cancer Institute of Canada and a portion of the funds secured in the Cancer Campaign will be used for Cancer Research—the balance will be for Education.
