Sorrow on the Sea.

(From the Rock.)

The following exquisitely beautiful little poem appeared in the "Christian," on the 4th inst. It was written some years ago in a friend's album, by the late Captain Hare, of H. M. S. "Eurydice," whose loss only those who knew him well know how to adequately mourn. The gallant officer was a faithful and consistent follower of Christ, "ready to go at a moment's notice to his Master's call." May we all be equally well prepared when our summons comes! "If you can't swim, beware of Providence," once wrote the infidel Shelley, and his impious words, studied in the light of subsequent events, read like a strange and dark provision of his fearful end. In a far different spirit we scan the lines—so true in their sentiment and so melodious in their cadence—which Captain Hare unconsciously "bequeathed as a rich legacy" to the loved ones he has left behind, and from whom he is now separated "for a little season." "There is sorrow on the sea—it cannot be quiet.—Jer. XLIX Chap., 22rd verse.

"I stood on the shore of the beautiful sea,
As the billows were roaring wild and free;
Onward they came with unfeeling force,
Then backward turned in their restless course
Ever and anon sounded their roar,
Foaming and dashing against the shore;
Ever and ever they rose and fell,
With heaving and sighing and mighty swell;
And deep seemed calling aloud to deep,
Lest the murmuring waves should drop to sleep.

In summer and winter, by night and by day,
Thro' cloud and sunshine holding their way;
Oh! when shall the ocean's troubled breast
Calmly and quietly sink into rest?
Oh! when shall the waves wild murmuring
cease,

And the mighty waters be hush'd to peace?
Then the ocean's voice I heeded to hear,
Mournfully, solemnly—sounding near,
Like a wail sent up from the caves below,
F fraught with dark memories of human woe.
Telling of loved ones buried there,
Of the dying shriek and the dying prayer;
Telling of hearts still watching in vain
For those who shall never come again;

Of the widow's groan, the orphan's cry,
And the mother's speechless agony.
Oh, no, the ocean can never rest
With such secrets hidden within its breast.
There is sorrow written upon the sea,
And dark and stormy its waves must be:
It cannot be quiet, it cannot sleep,—
That dark, relentless, and stormy deep.

But a day will come, a blessed day,
When earthly sorrow shall pass away,
When the hour of anguish shall turn to peace,
And even the roar of the waves shall cease;
Then out from its deepest and darkest bed,
Still ocean shall render up her dead,
And, freed from the weight of human woes,
Shall quietly sink in her last repose.

No sorrow shall ever be written then
On the depths of the sea or the hearts of men;
But heaven and earth renewed shall shine,
Still clothed in glory and light divine;
Then, where shall the billows of ocean be?
Gone! for in heaven there is "no more sea."

That a bright and beautiful thing of earth,
That cannot share in the soul's "new birth";
"This a life of murmur, and tossing and spray,
And at resting time it must pass away.
But oh thou glorious and beautiful sea!
There is health and joy and blessing in thee;
Solemnly, sweetly, I hear thy voice,
Bidding me weep and yet rejoice—
Weep for the loved ones buried beneath,
Rejoice in Him who has conquered death;
Weep for the sorrowing and tempest tossed,
Rejoice in him who has saved the lost;
Weep for the sin, the sorrow, and strife,
And rejoice in the hope of eternal life."

A Fiendish Trade.

(From the New York Herald.)

Indignation could scarcely go to greater lengths against any occupation than it has already gone against the Italian padrones who conduct an infamous traffic in the slavery of children in this and other cities; but it appears that the horrible industry of selling Italian boys and girls into a slavery which requires them to pursue the vocation of mendicants is not the worst of the offences of these men, and if the latest allegation made against them is true the indignation hitherto felt will be a mild sentiment by comparison with the mood in which they will be regarded. There is reason to believe that a blind child found in the streets in the custody of an Italian beggar has been purposely blinded to fit her to excite the sympathy of passers-by that her mendicant keeper may profit thereby. It is to be hoped that if this charge is sustained an example may be made that will at once stop such a horrible trade.

The threatened repeal of the United States bankruptcy law has caused great activity in insolvency proceedings. At Chicago four insolvencies were reported on each of the first three days of the week, twelve yesterday, and ten are expected soon.

Secretary Sherman has sent a letter to the Republican members of the Ohio Legislature and the State Republican Executive Committee defending the course of the Administration and calling upon the party to unite and prevent the restoration of the Democrat party to power, which he says is the only danger that threatens the public peace and safety.

Among the "eccentricities" of the late Lord Leitrim which have come to light as posthumous ones is the following:—A few years ago he advertised for some one to fill up the vacancy in his Donegal agency. Three hundred applicants wrote to him, and in answer to one of them he said that he wished to appoint a military gentleman used to shooting natives in Australia and New Zealand, as he wanted a wholesome lesson given to the tenants on his estate.

THE following verses, which have no other merit than that of being sincere and in earnest, were written many years ago, during the war in the Crimea and at Sebastopol. In principle they are equally applicable now when "monster meetings" in Hyde Park are endeavoring to drive the British Government into an abyss which may have no bottom, and when Canada is called upon to send away ten thousand of her best and bravest sons, who may full soon be called upon to defend their own frontier against Fillibusters, Fenians, et id genus omne. Verbum sat sapienti. Those who read the History of the year 1811 must remember that in England's dire struggle against the first Napoleon, the gigantic President declared war in time of peace by firing a broadside into the "Little Belt." Vich Dhomuil mon ard:—

O pause awhile my countrymen! consider well your work,
When thus, against a Christian Prince, ye battle for the Turk!
O pause awhile, my countrymen! and judge if it be right
To aid the Moslem Crescent 'gainst the cross of Russian might!

Old England's peers and gentlemen, assailed on every side,
In serried band can scarce withstand the Rabbles' roaring tide;
Is this a time for England's sons in Turkey's aid to roam,
And leave their Fatherland a prey to maddened mobs at home?

'Tis true, indeed, our country fights as was her wont to do,
And Russia will be met as France was met at Waterloo;
To quell the ruthless Corsican was then Old England's hope,
And Scotland saw in Bonaparte a second Johnny Cope.

But Russia wields a trenchant sword, when rising in her might,
And England's whiggish statesmanship has robbed her of the right,—
First to agree to Russia's wish, and then the deed ignore!
How changed is England of to-day from Tory times of yore!

With "Nane but Highland bonnets here?" the gleaming weapons shine;
Sir Collin Campbell's plaided ranks are formed in triple line!
While Russia's best, her veteran host, in wild confusion hurled,
Proclaim the "Chlann nan Gael" the boast and wonder of the world.

Ye Highland Chiefs, my kinsmen true, my fancy hears the sounds
Of your wild Pibroch, and my heart to every note rebounds!
Wherever march the plaided Gael, in cause, or right or wrong,
With them my kindred spirit flies, not like itself more long.

When Douglas hurled the heart of Bruce amid the Moslem crew,
"Brave heart," he cried, "I follow thee, as was my wont to do!"
Then rushing 'mid the Scimitars, in battle's direst close,
He little thought his country's targe would ever defend such foes!

If graver themes, my countrymen, your better thoughts engage,
Then turn ye, for your guidance, to the Bible's holy page!
The Booke of Royal Chronicles the story sad can tell,
How fighting in a cause unblest, King Ahaziah fell.

May nations meet in conference to heal each hostile jar!
And put a final end to all the miseries of war!
May discord and rebellion, too, in Christian countries cease!
May all our thoughts be charity, and all our days be peace.
—Patriot.

London market quotations report "saltpetre quite." Every nation has a full supply on hand.

Many years ago in Scotland illicit distillation was a practice consequent on the national love of potent beverages. It was lamentably prevalent. The idle Highlander planted his still in the remote glen of the mountain corrie, and prepared his whiskey by the light of the moon. He was an incorrigible offender. An Argyleshire Highlander was reproved by his minister for engaging in this illegal traffic. "Ye manna ask me," said the smuggler, "to gie't up, for it supports the family. My father, an, his father afore him, made a drappie. The drink is gude—far better for a bodie than the coarse big-still whiskey." Besides, I permit me swearin' at the still, an' a' is dune decently an in order. I dinna see muckle harm in't."

Mr. D., an Irish gentleman well-known in New York, was lately invited to dinner in that city by a wealthy Scotch resident, at whose generous table he met a number of his host's countrymen. The conversation turned on Irish bulls, of which one and another of the company reported several, until the table was in a roar. The Irish guest kept quiet until his patience was exhausted, but at length blurted out:—"Say, Mr., an' do ye know what I think?" "Why, indeed, what do you think, Mr. D.?" "Shure, sir, an' do you know that I think, indade, that not more than one-half of these lies that they tell about the Irish are true?" This unintended contribution to the subject under discussion brought down the house.
