

Hay Hall, the seat of Mr. Smith, was said to have been burned down on the preceding night.

A large party of the Rioters were seen on Monday morning at Bromsgrove Lukey.

The prisons were broken open, and the prisoners liberated.

The rage of the mob against Mr. Taylor and Mr. Ryland, who, though dissenters, did not attend the anniversary dinner, no one can account for;—they are men most highly respected by all parties, and their loss in particular is a subject of general concern—The latter lies dangerously ill from his agitation of spirits, at the Bear inn in Woodstock.

Three troops of the Oxford Blues were met yesterday morning, between Redburn and Saint Alban's, on their way to Birmingham, where they are not expected to arrive until this evening.

We shall not enter into the examination or contradiction of any of the vague rumours which, on this occasion, have disgraced the Press of the Country.—The Refutation, as well as the DETECTION, belongs to a period of more coolness. We join most earnestly in the hopes which are entertained, that the rioters will decline encountering with the regular troops, and that an end may be thus put to slaughter and devastation. From whatever motive it has been PROPELLED in the first instance, and suffered to pass WITHOUT DISCOURAGEMENT in the second—the Evil of the Hour has already been more than sufficient!

BIRMINGHAM.

MONDAY, 5 o'clock in the Afternoon.

Amidst such confusion, it is hardly possible to collect any thing with exact precision. It is some satisfaction, however, to be able to say, that Mr. Budd's house has escaped with little injury, and that Hay-hall and arahole mill, though damaged, are not demolished.

At Hay-hall, a party of Mr. Smith's friends defeated the mob, and took five prisoners, but after some time, were obliged to suffer them to be liberated, and betake themselves to flight.

The streets are filled with an amazing concourse of people, but they all seem to be peaceable spectators. The military are endeavouring to disperse them, but in vain. The 15th regiment of light dragoons left Nottingham on Sunday morning at ten, and arrived here about ten o'clock in the evening, distance 54 miles.

People have so crowded about the light horse, that one boy has been trampled on, and is just taken to the hospital.

Large bills were stuck up, requesting all peaceable inhabitants to retire to their respective habitations, but to no purpose.

Tuesday, 9 o'clock in the morning.

The last has been a very peaceable night, and this morning presents the appearance of tranquillity.

On Saturday night, Mr. Taylor, after having beheld the destruction of his beautiful seat at Bosley, had engaged a bed to sleep in Birmingham, but, suddenly altering his mind, he wished to go to Worcester. No post chaise could be got; he at last procured the Litchfield stage to take him there. The Mob getting information of this, intercepted the coach on its return, totally destroyed it, and so ill treated the driver, that the poor fellow is, for the present, totally incapable of business.

Three quarters past 9 in the morning.

The Bristol mail is this moment arrived. The guard reports, that a few only of the rioters entered Bromsgrove, he had heard of no damage done, but that it was reported about 100 were gone to Bewdley.

Labourers have been employed ever since Saturday, in digging out the remains of the poor wretches who, by the fall of the roof, were buried in Mr. Ryland's cellar. Besides Woodcock, a very miserable wretch, whose remains were known only by the buckle in one of his shoes, three others have been taken out, one dead and two alive; one most rightfully burnt, sat upright on the grass, and said that many more were in the cellar;—he was taken to the hospital, but died soon after. The other, a boy, is yet alive in the hospital.

The fires seen on Sunday, were at the houses of Mr. Harwood, Mr. Russel, Mosley Hall, several hay ricks, a farm house, Dallox Chappel, better known by the name of Kings-wood, or King's heath Chapel, and some others.

LONDON, JULY 21.

We announce with pleasure, from letters dated Birmingham, Tuesday, eight o'clock in the evening, that every thing was then perfectly quiet. The military from different quarters had accumulated, and were so formidable, that very little apprehensions were entertained of the riots being renewed. It was not known, however, that the mob was entirely dispersed; it was rather believed that they were in the adjacent villages, or gone to the nearest towns to add to their outrages upon the Dissenters; and so immense was the idle and dangerous crowd which filled the streets of Birmingham, that the military did not think it prudent to leave that place in quest of the rioters.

INTELLIGENCE FROM PARIS, JULY 15.

CONFEDERATION.

Yesterday was fortunately unclouded, and the Spectacle, in splendor and attendance, could only be surpassed by the scene of the former year.

The Altar was erected in the centre of the Champ de Mars, and was the same in its construction as before, but the allegorical paintings in CHIARO OSCURA, and the inscriptions, were new, and are those which it is intended to make permanent, by a superb edifice of marble, in the same place. The sixty battalions of the Parisian Guards were arranged as before, and formed an immense square.

The different orders in the procession, drest in their medallions, took their station directly opposite to the Altar, where tents had been erected in case of rain, and covered chairs were placed before them.—From this point the orders were given, and every thing was done; and here, by the politeness of the nation, I and other Englishmen were placed. Colonel Tarleton rode, in his American uniform, with M. de la Fayette, who, attended by his escort, rode round the circle. The Mass was said by the Bishop of Paris, attended by all the Ecclesiastics of the metropolis. After this the colours received their benediction, and marched off to their several stations to the tune of CA IRA. The ceremony concluded with a grand TR DEUM.

CHARLOTTE-TOWN.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 21.

Lately arrived at Cascumpeck from Cowes the brig Minerva, James Cobby, jun. master. In this vessel came passenger Capt. Alexander Fletcher, of this island.

The Minerva left England the latter end of July, and had a passage of seven weeks.

The schooner Endeavour, commanded by Captain Dugald Stewart, and belonging to Mr. Cambridge, merchant, of this place, arrived at London, from Leghorn, just before the Minerva sailed. The performance of Quarantine would detain the Endeavour some time, but she may now be looked for every hour.

Last week a fine new Schooner, belonging to Messrs. John Brecken, and Co. of this place, with the appropriate name of the PROSPERITY, commanded by Capt. William Baker, sailed for Saint John's, Newfoundland, from whence she is to proceed for Europe, and will return to this Island in the course of the next spring.

The Eclipse of the Moon last week must have been observed by the philosophical here with great pleasure—as the atmosphere was uncommonly clear, and the scene magnificently beautiful.
