

THE CAPTURE OF LOVATZ.

The closing scenes of the fight at Lovatz are thus described by the New York "Herald's" correspondent:—

ONLY THE REDOUBT REMAINS.

"At twenty-five minutes past twelve o'clock a battery moves up to support the advance of this regiment, and takes a position on the road leading along the eastern end of Mount Rous. Ten minutes after Skobeloff's column rushes up the road and takes the heights of Mount Rous, and he crowns them with his infantry. The garrison of the Turkish batteries away to our left, on the Trajan road, now withdraw toward Trajan, taking the artillery with them. At one o'clock we have taken all the Turkish positions except the redoubt on the Plevna road, the strongest of all, for it commands the little valley at the bottom of the amphitheatre, and has outlying detached works to flank an attacking force.

THE SECOND PERIOD.

"The first period of the battle has now terminated. Orders are given to advance our batteries to the top of Mount Rous, and the right wing creep carefully forward toward the foot of the amphitheatre, so as to be ready for the attack on the redoubt.

STORMING THE LAST REDOUBT.

"The remainder of the battle I witnessed from the top of Mount Rous, which was within easy cannon shot of the positions attacked. Between the foot of the amphitheatre and the base of the hill upon which the redoubt was constructed was a level plain half a mile wide forming the bottom of the valley. The attacking force was compelled to cross this little plain under the musketry fire of the Turkish infantry, securely ensconced behind their parapets.

BY THE OSMA'S SIDE.

"Along the road and on the left bank of the Osma were several low ridges of earth high enough to cover a man in a creeping posture, and these places of refuge were resting places in the deadly race for the bluff. A cemetery, through which the Russians also had to pass, had a number of tall flagstones standing upright, and these were taken advantage of by the advancing soldiers.

THROUGH THE CEMETERY.

"The attacking force contained the two regiments named after the German Emperor and some men of the army corps which was at Plevna. It was commanded by Major General Razmindaleff. At half past two o'clock the order to attack was given and the men rushed across the valley amid a perfect hailstorm of bullets. In a few minutes the ground was dotted with dead and wounded Russians, and the survivors were resting under the little ridges of the road and the Osma. The men advanced in open order at a rush, and the Turks kept up a steady stream of fire.

THE STORM OF IRON HAIL.

"There was not the slightest break in the rain of bullets; yet it was wonderful to see how small a proportion of them took effect. Sometimes a single soldier would run across the whole space between the river and bluff; I could see where every bullet hit around him by the dust which it threw up, and yet he generally got across unhurt. There were minutes when no Russian was under fire, and yet the Turks never stopped shooting.

LOOK BEFORE YOU FIRE.

"It appears they were lying down in the trenches firing over the parapets without looking. The Russians declare they never saw even a head above the bank. By 3 o'clock a considerable force had collected under the bluff and commenced working round to the angle of the redoubt looking up the Plevna road, while another party, to distract the attention from the first, crept up the face of the bluff and opened a scathing fire on the face of the redoubt toward Lovatz.

RETREAT CUT OFF.

"Away to the northward of the Plevna road the Russian force now makes its appearance, with a battery of artillery to cut off the Turkish retreat toward Plevna. Another attacking column is now seen advancing up the River Osma from an extreme right. They are scattered in open order, and steal along unobserved by the Turks to reinforce the party under the northern end of the bluff. All this time the Turks kept up an incessant rifle fire, but the guns on the hills at the back of the redoubt only fire occasionally, as our troops cannot be seen from that position.

THE DECISIVE MOMENT.

"It is now four p. m., and the decisive moment approaches. The men along the Lovatz front of the work open fire and draw the bulk of the Turkish fire in their direction, when, suddenly, about fifty Russians made a rush upon the eastern face of the redoubt and approach within fifty yards of the ditch. They were compelled to retire by a tremendous Turkish fire, but apparently none of them were seriously hurt, as none fell.

DESULTORY FIRING.

"After twenty minutes of desultory fire, the real attack is made upon the slope facing the eastern side of the redoubt. The Russians rush up in open order, keeping a steady stream of reinforcements following the advance. A perfect deluge of shells is poured upon the redoubt from our batteries as the men run up the slope, while the Turkish infantry fire is incessant, and if it were well directed every Russian would have been shot down.

DISASTER AND RETREAT.

"As it is, many fall. Our artillery ceases firing as our men leap into the ditches and clamber up the parapet, while another column rushes along the Lovatz face of the redoubt to clear the advance trenches. The Turks who are in the trenches fly to the westward, firing as they go, and falling under the Russian fire. In the redoubt the garrison rush to the gorge in the western face of the work. There is a traverse covering this gorge, and the Turks are jammed between the traverse and the western parapet. In a few seconds the firing ceases, the day is ours and the Turks are in full retreat to the westward, where no force had been sent to cut off their flight.

DEAD IN HEAPS.

"Immediately after the redoubt was taken I entered it. The road and adjacent plain were thickly dotted with the dead and wounded. Up the slope, where the Russians had charged the redoubt, I was surprised to find so few dead, the Turkish fire having principally gone too high. Inside of the redoubt were corps of Turks and Russians thickly strewn the ground, but at the western end, where the Turks had been jammed in their efforts to escape, a space of fifty feet by twenty feet was covered with Turkish dead and wounded to the depth of five feet.

ENEMY AND FOE.

"The living and the dead were lying on each other in a dense mass, steaming with heat and blood. Around this Moslem pile was a fringe of dead Russians, showing that there had been a fearful struggle in this fatal space. Russian soldiers were standing upon this mass of humanity. I watched them working manfully to separate the living from the dead. In half an hour they had made scarcely an impression upon that fatal pile.

DEAD ON THE ROAD.

"The road by which the Turks had retreated was strewn with Turks, with here and there a Russian. Some of the Turks had been shot first, and then repeatedly bayoneted. The correspondent estimates the Russian loss at 1000. Masses were not exposed as at Plevna. Skill was substituted for brute force. General Razmindaleff, who commanded the assault on the redoubt, was wounded in the leg."
