Cod-liver oil suggests consumption, which is almost unfortunate.

Its best use is before you fear consumption; when you begin to get thin, weak, run down; then is the prudent time to begin to take care, and the best way to take care is to supply the system with needed fat and strength. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, will bring back plumpness to those who have lost it, and make strength where raw cod-liver oil would be a burden.

A substitute only imitates the original.

The Buffalo Gold Mining Company have acquired and paid for in full, three claims. The Buffalo, Ontario and Great Britain No 1, each 1,500 ft square, are situated on O K Mountain about three quarters of a mile from the famous O K, the great free-milling property of Trail Creek, and about three miles from the town of Rossland. On the Buffalo claim, there are two leads, one of quartz, from four to fifteen feet wide, and cropping for 800 feet, from the surface of which assays have been taken running from $5 to $42 in gold per ton. The other is an immense iron cap nearly 30 feet wide.

On the Ontario only prospecting work has been done, consisting of stripping a fine ledge which crops out through the claims.

On the Great Britian No 1 there is a white quartz lead running through the property from which free gold has been obtained. This is confidently expected to prove up well when further work has been done.

Taking everything into consideration, having three full claims, the numerous ledges, and especially the free milling ledge, cheap trans portation, the stock in this company should prove a paying investment and well worthy of your attention.

Four men are now working and more will be added to keep up quick and continuous development.

A limited number of shares of the treasury stock will be placed on the market at the remarkable low price of 5 cents, and no more will be sold at this price after the first issue. Address all letters to

A MAIDEN FAIR.

BY CHARLES GIBBON.

CHAPTER XI.

It was a busy day for the master and crew of the Mermaid. The cargo consisted chiefly of salt, saltpeter, and a large quantity of oil, intended for one of the experiments in oiling the angry waves for which Peterhead was become famous. The captain was desirous of having all cleared out before the noon of the following day, and his men found him more impatient than they had ever known him before.

Cargill would have persuaded Annie to accompany him on an excursion inland to view some of the beauties of Buchan, which he had been told were numerous. She declined, pleasantly enough, as it seemed, but so firmly that he did not persist. He counted upon his victory during the return passage.

On this second day after the departure of Ross there was amazement on board the Mermaid at sight of old Dick Baxter hirpling along the quay as calmly consequential and as much at home as if he had been at Newhaven.

"Dod, there are surely few bees i' the byke when the drones come out," exclaimed the captain cheerily. "Whar in the world do ye come frae, Baxter?"

"Just frae hame, captain, and I'm wantin' you to tak' me back again."

"And are you out on business, or are you just taking a daunder to see the kintry?"

"Oo, baith, captain; a man's never ower auld to learn, and I hae been learning a heap as I cam' alang. But I would never hae started if it hadna been that naething would satisfee Bell Cargill except that I should gang ance errant to look after her calf."

"What's ta'en the auld wife?" said the captain, laughing; "does she think he canna take care o' himsel'?—he's auld enough."

"I couldna say; but Bell has notions, and she will hae them carried out."

"Aweel, gang you below, and Annie will see that you hae something to eat."

"And whar's Jeems the' noo"

"Up the town, some gate."

At that Dick Baxter hirpled down to the cabin with unusual alacrity. To Annie his only salutation was, as he presented a letter:—

"Bob Ross sends you that, missy."

Her face flushed with pleasure; but she put the note in her pocket in order to attend to the wants of the unexpected guest.

"Na, na," he said hurriedly; "read your bit letterie, and while you're doing that I want to look into Jeems's cabin. I hae got an idea in my head that puir Bob didna get fair play, and I want to try and make sure o't."

"You think that?" she cried joyfully.

"I hae nae doubt about it and the doctor that saw him in Edinbro has nae doubt about it—for, tak' his word for it that he tasted naething a' day exceptin' what Jeems gied him. But we want to mak' sure afore speaking. Whar's his cabin?"

She pointed to a door. Old Dick passed into the place, closing the door after him. Annie, like many others, had great faith in Dick Baxter's wisdom, for as he studied the newspapers so carefully he could always tell about everything that was going on, and no one had ever been bold enough to question his judgment on any question of right and wrong.

She opened her letter with fingers which were not quite so steady as usual, and read her first love-letter. It was a strange one.

"I write this to let you know I am better, Annie, and to tell you that there has been some mistake about me somewhere.

"On the way to the station, Campbell told me about everything that happened, and although I could not take it all in clearly at the time I have been able to do so since. You all think that I was drinking. You will believe me—I had nothing except what Cargill gave me, and that I took because after what you said to me I was kind of pitying him, and did not like to show ill-feeling. There was something wrong about that whisky. Dick Baxter had been reading something in the paper that made him suspect it the minute I told him about the accident.

"He is going to you. If he should be right I will be able to face your father and the world again, and, best of all, I will be able to meet you without feeling that there is any shame upon me.

"It has been a hard time for me, Annie, and I do not think I could have come through it but for you—God bless you. I am hoping that there is only a wee while to wait till I may see you again; and I am afeared that something may come between us yet. But nothing can change me."

She put the letter in her pocket. There was a new light on her face, making it look gentler and happier than it had ever done before. Ay, she did believe him—she had believed all along that he had been betrayed in some way, although she could not guess how. But Dick Baxter was a clever man and he would find it out.

When Dick reappeared from Cargill's cabin there was a peculiar smirk on his wizened face, and nodding to Annie complacently he muttered:—

"Just as I thought, just as I thought."

"What is as you thought?" she inquired eagerly.

"Gie me a minute or twa," he answered, seating himself before the joint of corn beef which had been placed for him. He took a dram first and then ate heartily. His reflections were much aided by this proceeding, and when he had finished he produced a large well-worn pocketbook, and a scrap of paper which had been cut from some newspaper.

"I dinna want to gie you ony false hopes, missy but if I be na far wrang, Bob Ross will soon be put right."

"You have found out how it was done?"

"I jaloused it as soon as Bob let me ken what had happened. You see what comes o' reading the papers. I would hae been like the lave o' you maybe if I hadna read that."

He handed her the scrap of paper. It was the report of a common enough police case: a man enticed into a house, drugged, robbed, and turned out into the street in a state of apparent drunken stupefaction.

"This is what he has done!" she cried excitedly.

"Bide a minute, missy. You hae a heap to answer for; if it hadna been for you, the gowk would never hae thought o' sic a daftlike thing. Hows'ever, we want to clear Bob. You say naething about this, no even to your father, and I'll satisfee him that he was mista'en. Whan do you start?"

"To-morrow morning."

"Weel, as soon's I hae told Jeems what his mother wants, I'll gang hame again by train the day. But I would like you to tell me ane or twa things first."

The "ane or twa things" included the whole of her conversation with Cargill about Ross, and the information she had gathered about the men separately that not one had observed the slightest sign of anything being wrong with the pilot until they found him lying by the wheel.

"It's just wonderfu' how you thought about seeking out a, that," said Dick admiringly; "but you were aye a clever lass, missy. I canna understand how the captain should be sae ready to think ill o' Bob."

"Cargill made him believe that he had been drinking before."

"Aweel, that'll a' be set right afore lang. You and me mann keep a calm sough for a wee while. Just you keep on as you hae been doing—keep frien's wi' him and maybe we'll get mair out o' him."

When Cargill returned he was annoyed exceedingly to find his bugbear, Dick Baxter, waiting for him, and almost started into a rage when he heard the well-known salutation:—

"Well, Jeems, how's a' wi' you the day?"

He would have turned away at once from this pest, but he was detained by the next words.

"Your mother sent to you ance errand. She wouldna believe in the post or the telegraph; the matter was sae particular that naething would serve her but I maun come wi' her message."

"What is it she wants now?" was the surly and impatient query.

"She doesna want you to break your trip; but she commands you to gang straight to her the minute you land. She bade me say that you would hurt yoursel' mair than you can fancy, if you didna do her bidding."

"Very well."

"You'll come the minute you land?"

"Of course, since she is so particular about it."

"I'll tell her to expect you, for I'm gaun back by train the day."

That evening in the gloaming, work over and all quiet in the harbor Captain Duncan was sitting on deck smoking. Annie was walking up and down, occasionally halting beside him. During one of these halts, he said abruptly:—

"Annie, I want you to be kind to Jeems Cargill."

This was the first time he had referred to the subject of the proposed union since that evening in the cottage.

"What for in especial, father?"

He puffed slowly, and looked over the bulwark into the clear blue water which was plashing gently against the sides of the Mermaid. He was perplexed: what especial reason was there for asking her to be kind to Cargill? He himself had no especial regard for the man, and but for his fortune would have had little to say to him.

"It's this way, Annie; you see he's a man that has a great notion o' you: he's weel-to-do in the world; there's naebody has ony particular ill to say against him; he asked me to put in a word for him wi' you. I said I would, and I'm doing it. You might do a hantle waur than agree to be Mistress Cargill."

She laid her hand on his shoulder: she could feel the awkwardness with which he spoke. At another time she would have relieved him by laughing at the whole affair. At present she had too many anxious thoughts weighing upon her for laughter to find vent.

"I told you my mind about this, father, when you mentioned it before. I am of the same mind yet, and I will never change."

"Aweel, aweel, I'm no ane to force your will. I was meaning you for another man a' the while; but I hae done what I promised and nae mair need be said. You would hae loupit blithely enough at—but that's a' by and nae mair need be said."

He got up and leaned over the bulwark now, puffing vigorously.

A vague suspicion of his meaning flashed across her mind, making her heart leap quick with surprise and joy.

"Who are you speaking about now, father?" she asked, her voice low and not quite steady as usual.

"Never heed, never heed. It's a' by noo—the damned fool!"

Then there was silence. She was trembling and afraid to speak lest she should find that she misinterpreted her father's thoughts.

"I'm sair put about wi' Bob Ross," he said by and by, half angrily, half-regretfully. "What a hypocrite he maun hae been!—I would as soon hae thought o' doing sic a thing mysel' as him. Had it no been for that, he was the man for you and the Mermaid tae."

"And will be, father," she cried, gleefully.

"Na, that canna be noo—it's a' by. I'd sooner see you maerrit to Jeems Cargill."

"Oh, father, you will find that you are mistaken about poor Bob"

"That's impossible."

In the midst of her great gladness there came that cruel thought—everything had been lost by that one blunder. She knew what Cargill had done; Dick Baxter knew it; but how could they prove it?

Emotional Egotists.

The self-contained woman of a moody and brooding temperament nearly always thinks herself misunderstood and unappreciated. She is conscious of many ideas and emotions which are seldom expressed by those around her. So she imagines that they are unique and that she herself is an original thinker. She finally concludes that these vagrant and fleeting thoughts, which would be rejected by stronger minds, are worth preserving, and that, as much courage is required to speak or write them, such courage argues the possession of genius. It is thus very easy for an egotist to grow to consider itself unique and a genius.

A notable example of this absurd mistake was shown by the late Marie Bashkirtseff. Her great terror was lest her "feelings" should be forgotten. She would have shown higher courage if she had consigned her emotions to oblivion and allowed only her work to stand. The most profound feeling which her story arouses in the mind of the reader is of pity for a woman who struggled, was overwhelmed and sank in such shallow waters.

Her sufferings, which were real enough, arose from an over supply of the most unfortunate passions of the human heart—great self-conceit and profound self-absorption. And to these she added the moral blindness of never quite perceiving that they were contemptible.

But there are many other men and women, dubbed geniuses by the world, whose genius consists in the fact that the only passions in their natures which they find strong enough to give the world are the lowest of which human nature is capable. The genius is rarer who knows that there must be omissions, that the lower passions must always be sacrificed to the higher, and that in the soul's struggle upward it is wisest not only to crush out but bury without an epitaph feelings of which we should be ashamed.

I have taken doctors' advice and their medicines with the same result. My cure commenced as soon as I started taking Dodd's Kidney Pills, and after taking ten boxes I am happy to say that my cure is perfect.
