MARY HAWORTH

Girl Holds The Conviction That She Is Worthless

Dear Mary Haworth: Isn't it seemly for a girl in her late teens, a college graduate, married, good looking and intelligent, to be running around in a male homosexual? He goes to lunch with them to their various apartments supper and drinks. He also has another side, frequently goes out with married men, some of whom are children, and admits to being an affair (at this time) with a husband and father who still living with his wife. He will not see a psychiatrist, claiming she is well adjusted. What would you advise? Use don't suggest a clergyman. She has no church and he is nothing. I am her uncle. J.Y. What's the use of giving prescriptions to, or for, a man-person whose mind is so to helpful suggestions? I've seen your niece holds the notion that she is worthless and perhaps unconscious. She is darkly resolved to get the point emphatically. I'm afraid the company she is in indicates that she is a mess, essentially. In general, male homosexuals are hostile to women, what their surface manner may seem to the contrary. Also, I've seen men who philander and hold themselves in contempt, but also despise and actually reject the women who their game. This girl won't see a psychiatrist, that's that. And if she has no religious sense, so be it. Anything that would give her perspective on right-versus-wrong, she is morally deaf, blind. Thus, only the grace of God can penetrate her darkness to change her course. And my advice to you, pray for that; and keep praying, undiscouraged. I'm in mind that St. Monica, 20 years praying for Augustine, her rakehell son, before he surrendered to grace and was transformed into one of the greatest Christian apostles.

Dear F.F.: You are making a fool of yourself over Cliff, who obviously is ashamed of having sneak-dated you, thus involving himself in your shabby treatment of your fiancée. As of now, you're too immature for marriage. This is the inner significance of your sudden flighty infatuation with Cliff. I think, it is a form of backsliding away from the awesome finality of marriage "until death do us part."

If John is a manly fellow who really loves you, perhaps you ought to let him decide whether to end the engagement. Perhaps you should tell him the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth about your recent double-mindedness. He may be fit to break with you, or he may elect to stand by and try to help you grow up and get integrated emotionally.

M.H. Mary Haworth counsels through her column, not by mail or personal interview. Write her in care of The Guardian.

ELLEN'S DIARY

Rays Of The Spring Sun Touch Ripples In Stream

"Heart and dressing—one of my favorite dishes!" Granddaughter smiled coming by when we were lifting it to the platter. "May I have just a taste of it?"

"Heart!" Mack hearing her exclaimed. "When you slice it I'll have a sandwich please."

"Heart!" Alex said. "Is my name on it? I'll go and ask Mother if I may stay here to dinner." He shook his head dolefully. "All we're having at our house — wouldn't you know it! It's just a roast of beef."

"Sounds good" we said.

"It is good" he nodded "but not when there's heat!"

So beef heart was our Saturday's dinner. And brown gravy spiced with the savory of the dressing, with turnip from the neat one James had carried in from the falling store in the barn, and potato from the small bin in the cellar.

And the old sparkle was back in the stream below the front meadow, the diamond glints of the sun's touch on the ripples, as it flows on down to the spillways. This scene is a part of this season. It belongs with the smoky haze of drying fields, a startling whistle, a robin's thrill, a song-sparrow's tune—and lads, young and older, come on first excursions to haunts of the stream. A car came down the hill, and turning in the mill-road, parked by the mill.

"Fishermen" we commented. "It's a great day for them" James nodded.

"Pears or prunes?" we queried of the dessert.

"Prunes, Ellen— and perhaps, a cookie or two."

"What is the work for this afternoon?" Mack with Alex at an elbow, presently inquired at the door.

"Ask your Dad. I believe there are some pens and stals to clean" James replied.

"Well!" Mack grinned "I'm afraid they'll have to wait until I've had a spell at the fishing!"

"You wouldn't have a tin to hold worms—one with a cover?" Alex questioned.

"So it will fit in a pocket" Mack explained.

"You won't be away long — this is such a lovely day for our work" James said.

"The gods" an inscription on an ancient Assyrian tablet has it "do not subtract from the allotted span of men's lives, the hours spent in fishing."

"Fishing" someone has pointed out "is a chance to wash one's soul with pure air, with the ripple of the stream, and the shimmer of the sun on the blue waters. It brings meekness, and inspiration from the glory and wonder of nature, and charity toward tackle-makers. It brings mockery to profits; the quieting of hate, and lift of the spirit."

So pleasant a day this was, a happy combination of the numberless items, which together, for us, makes up this season of Spring.

"I'm glad our Master found the time, To add the little frills;

Among the vegetables and trees Put yellow daffodils. He needed birds to eat the worms So other things might grow; How wonderful he made them sing In notes so sweet and low! He made for us long winter months The summertime did bring— And then, with such a lovely touch, He sandwiched in the Spring! Until Monday — Diary — Good-night.
