The Daily Examiner

NOVEMBER 12, 1884.

Editorial Notes.

—A foreign correspondent of THE EXAMINER writes: "You can give your farmers good advice viz: to clean their oats well—it pays in the long run to do all things well."

—Jay Gould's complimentary telegram to Cleveland was the greatest joke of a campaign in which there was much of the humorous. Gould had been the Republican purse-bearer and the contributor to the Republican cause of a good sized fortune!

— The Toronto Globe says "Mr. Blake has a much more difficult task to perform than Mr. Gladstone had"—when he was in opposition. No doubt of it. Mr. Gladstone had but to overthrow the government of Lord Beaconsfield; Mr. Blake wants to supplant Sir John Macdonald. Gladstone succeeded, but Blake can't succeed!

—Laclede remarks: "Our Canadian boatmen are doing wonders in Egypt. They work their boats with marvellous skill and rapidity. The troops cheer them from the banks and declare that without such aid they could not move on. We should be proud of this. It is the best answer to those everlasting croakers who proclaimed that the voyageurs would be a failure in that peculiar climate. Our Canadians will hereafter laugh when they hear about "cataracts." What are they to our rapids?"

— A St. John correspondent writes the Monetary Times as under about the business condition: "The complaint is general, hereabout, of dull, hard times. But for all that, every business man I have spoken to—and I have conversed with a dozen or more here and at Moncton and Sussex—says he is doing more business this year than last or at least as much. So that there does not appear to be good ground for the complaints heard. To one who has not visited St. John since the great fire of 1877, the air of business about the town proves a surprise."

—Mr. H. Stanley has been lecturing at Manchester on his great hobby, viz. Africa. "We are only beginning" he said, "to have an intelligent idea of that vast continent. It has lain upon our maps, a huge unshapely mass, grimly outfigured, with an exasperating mystery and blankness about it, but comparatively little was understood of the geographical marvels of the enterior, of its various tribes of native inhabitants, in the growing and promising development of recently opened regions in Africa. We have, however, authentic illustrations of the value of geographical knowledge, and all who feel interested in the progress of commerce and civilization, should give increased attention and support to geographical study and investigation."

Obituary.

MR. JOHN TREMERE, the notice of whose death we published a short time since, was born in Devonshire, England, in the year 1815, emigrated to Canada in 1833, and shortly afterwards became one of the early settlers of North Wiltshire, in this Province. From the community in which he spent so many years of his life he will be much missed. His hospitality, kindness, and zeal for the welfare of the community at large, endeared him to many. Strictly honest, and possessed of excellent judgment, his counsel and advice was sought and followed. Of a retiring disposition, always esteeming others above himself, he was content to work quietly on, to be known by deeds rather than words. In public affairs he filled different positions of trust, and took an active part in politics as a supporter of the Liberal-Conservative party, and both in his public and private dealings retained the good will and confidence of all. He leaves a wife, three sons and three daughters to mourn their loss, but they mourn not as those without hope, for their loss is his eternal gain. His remains were followed to their last resting place by a large concourse of people.

All the industrial establishments in France in which children are employed were recently inspected, the result giving a return of 47,817 shops and factories, of which 24,756 were in Paris. In 1876 the places visited in Paris numbered only 568, so that the field under inspection must have greatly enlarged during the eight intervening years. The children of both sexes that came under the inspector's notice numbered 213,101. The legal age for children to begin work is on the completion of the twelfth year, but in certain lighter industries they are allowed to enter earlier. No child under twelve can be employed, however, without a certificate that he or she is sent to school. From twelve to fifteen, unless they have a primary certificate, children can only work six hours a day (half-time), being being obliged to go to school the other half. The number of summonses for contravention of the law was 255 last year, 77 of these being in Paris. These figures show a great diminution during the last few years and the inspectors report from all the districts visited a general recognition that the law is just and should be obeyed. Besides the inspectors, who have an initiative power of making or applying regulations, there are commissioners whose duty it is to see that the inspectors' instructions are carried out.

Opinions of the Press.

(Toronto Globe.)

The career of Henry Fawcett, late Postmaster-General of England, furnishes a remarkable instance of what pluck, energy and perseverance can accomplish in the face of terrible odds. Blind almost from the opening of his career, he yet grasped a high place among the representative Englishmen of his day, and left an indelible impress upon the legislation of his country His affliction seems, instead of embarrasing his progress, to have sharpened his powers, quickened his preceptions, and ripened his judgment, a not unfamiliar experience in the history of the blind. Mr. Fawcett was also materially assisted in his work by his estimable wife. He himself pronounced her the author of his success, the chief guiding and sustaining influence of his life.

(St. John Sun.)

The continued depression and prevalent hard times in Great Britain are hard nuts for the doctrinaire free traders to crack, and the more discerning of them have found this out, and are giving over all attempts in that direction. Now that the United States, Canada, and several of the other American governments, part of Australia and nearly all the nations of Europe are protectionists, there could be no better opportunity for free trade to thrive, if indeed that be the only true theory for trade practice. But with a perversity which must appear strange to the prejudiced disciples of the school of Cobden and Bright, the theory refuses to materialize into practical brigtness, and nowhere does the cloud rest more heavily than over the home and almost sole defender of free trade Nowhere is the labor market more disorganized, or idle workmen more numerous, or distress more clamorous than in the manufacturing centres of Great Britain. Nowhere are the farmers harder put to it in the keen competition with the outside producers, who are throwing into their markets butter, cheese, meats, cattle, grain and flour. While other countries are manufacturing more for home consumers, and at the same time enlarging the area of their foreign trade for manufactured articles, Great Britain is finding the foreign maker competing in both its home and foreign markets with increased sharpness and success.

(Montreal Gazette.)

It will be a pity if the opportunity for settling the Franco-Chinese quarrel by the mediation of England be allowed to pass unused. M Ferry, it is reported, has signified his willingness to come to terms in that way and has reduced the demand for indemnity to one-half its former amount. The Chinese, however, still hold back, believing that the payment of an indemnity is out of the question after the French avenging themselves for the alleged treaty violation by the destruction of valuable Chinese property. It would be wiser for M. Ferry to omit reference to the indemnity, leaving the whole decision to the power on which both Governments might agree as arbitrator. The whole misunderstanding really hangs on the conflicting evidence of a few persons, and the first thing to do would be to sift that evidence and ascertain whether the contre temps which interrupted reconciliation in May last was deliberately plotted by the Chinese, knowing its full significance, or only a natural mistake on the part of some military officers. If the whole question were left to the selected umpire, a conclusion which both contestants would accept might not take long to arrive at. At any rate, now that France has recognized the uselessness of trying to make an impression by filibustering in a country of such extent and population, it will be the fault of Chinese obstinacy if conditions of peace are not arrived at. If England took the matter in hand, the Chinese might be made to see that their own interests lay in pacification, as well as those of the western nations.

(London Truth.)

It would not surprise me were we to see somewhat rough times when the Lords throw out the Franchise Bill for the second time. The people are still in good humor, because they cannot bring themselves to believe that twenty or thirty hereditary nonentities, whose very names are unknown to them, can possibly have the assurance to pit themselves against Mr. Gladstone with the country at his back. The impudence of these worthy gentlemen is indeed so astounding that it is incredible. If, however, they persevere in wrong doing, the consequences may be serious. James II. was legally in the right in exercising his dispensing power, but when he attempted to do so, he soon had to run for his life. So, too, as Mr. Bright observed, had the Irish landlords, when they were under the illusion that they could levy the crushing rents to which they were by law entiled. There are occasions when plain simple people are apt to fall back upon first principles. Our ancestors made short work with monarchs who endeavored to force their will on the nation, and they did not exactly do this in order that a few irresponsible nonenties should play the same game. The smug editors of London newspapers; the gossips in London clubs and drawing rooms; the young lordlings and their henchmen who address electors at ticket meetings and in private parks: and the owners of these parks who eat, drink, shoot, hunt, and are merry, have about as much notion of the indignation which only awaits a spark in order to break forth into flame, as the fatted oxen before Christmas of what is likely to befall them.

(Chicago Herald.)

Let us not delude ourselves with fictitious greatness. There is another country at whose greatness we may well pause for contemplation. Its area exceeds eight and a half million square miles. The basis of its power is not land, but water. Its greatness is maritime, and its coast line is twenty-eight thousand five hundred miles long. It lies on both sides of the equator, but its boundaries touch the extreme of heat and cold. Its uncultivated area, which can be made to feed unborn millions without the help of the United States, covers millions of square miles. It contains one hundred thousand square miles of forest, which are being jealously preserved while ours are being ruthlessly sacrificed. Its population amounts to 315,000,000 souls, including pretty nearly all the races known to man. Its revenue for government amounts to more than a thousand million dollars annually, only one-fourth of which is levied in direct taxation. It has nearly a million men under arms. It has one policeman for every sixteen square miles of its entire area. Its 246 war vessels are all in commission, not rotting in harbors. Its merchant navy consists of 30,000 ships, manned by 270,000 sailors. Its sea-going tonnage amounts to eight and a half millions. It surpasses in steamers all other powers on the globe, and nearly equals their combined total in sailing vessels. Forty-nine per cent. of the carrying power of the world is under its flag. Nearly half the entire yearly cargo of the world is under that flag. More than half the ship earnings from freight and passengers belong to it. Two-thirds of the tonnage annually built belong to it. The banks of that empire transact one-third the business of the entire world. Its manufactures comprise one-third those of all Europe. It uses 30 per cent. of the horse power of the world. Its enormous debt, which it uses as the most profitable investment of its own earnings, amounts to only nine per cent. of its wealth. It is the wealthiest state in the world, and its wealth has been made by its exports. Its name is Great Britain.

(Pall Mall Gazette.)

Mr. Chamberlain is "going it," and no mistake. His latest appearance at Denbigh on Monday in the novel character of aggrieved and injured descendant of the Puritan ministers ejected by the Act of Uniformity, who vows vengeance upon the privileged assembly which has oppressed the Dissenters, was one of the most startling developments yet witnessed in our political melodrama. The whole passage is so striking and so novel that we cannot forbear quoting it in full:- "I have no spite against the House of Lords; but as a Dissenter (loud and prolonged cheering)—as a Dissenter—(renewed cheering)—I have an account to settle with them, and I promise you I will not forget the reckoning (loud cheers.) I boast a descent of which I am as proud as any baron may be of the title which he owes to the smiles of a king or to the favor of a king's mistress, for I can claim descent from one of the 2,000 ejected ministers, who, in the time of the Stuarts, left home and work and profit rather than accept the State-made creed which it was sought to force upon them; and for that reason, if for no other, I share your hopes and your aspirations, and I resent the insults, the injuries, and the injustice from which you have suffered so long at the hands of a privileged assembly (cheers). But the cup is nearly full (renewed cheers). The career of high-handed wrong is coming to an end (prolonged cheers). The House of Lords have alienated Ireland, they have oppressed the Dissenters, and they now oppose the enfranchisement of the people. We have been too long a peer-ridden nation (loud cheers), and I hope you will say to them that if they will not bow to the mandate of the people that they shall lose forever the authority which they have so long abused (loud and prolonged cheers)." If all England was as Wales is, Mr. Chamberlain would infallibly be our next Prime Minister Even as it is, his chances, unless Lord Salisbury repents him in time, are better than most people imagine.

It is stated by the Kingston News that a mine of mica has been found on lot 21, range 1, of the township of March. One vein has been tested to a depth of nine feet and the quality is satisfactory.
