ELLEN'S DIARY

The Littlest Grandchild Has Started To School

By this, the folks at Alderlea will have settled back into their former orderly routine of the farm. The Fair over, there will be no lonely spells now for Scampie, no puzzling over his family's complete absence.

By this too, if all goes well with it, the little school down the River Road will have opened its doors once more to its young students. Alex will return to it with fancy, with mixed emotions. His extended holiday, occasioned by the June-time accident, was for him, mostly pleasant.

Yet to him, as to his sister in her day there, school has been an interesting place, his assignments neither boring nor yet beyond his years. How will Peter accept the enclosing four walls, after the freedom of the tender years? He is a knowing chap, modest but not shy, and interested in other children. He also, since a small fellow, has been accustomed to taking his place in adult conversation. Will he miss Tomson, the dark kitten? And the sandpile beneath the white birch, where, with small machines, he spent hours alone or in company this summer, working out amazing young projects?

"You won't go with him, those first days?" one of the family teased, when we talked of his going. "Grandmothers may!"

In thought we shall attend him this youngest one of the grandchildren. Out the road, and across the busy highway. Thence by the shortcut of path which for years, even past recollecting, has led generations of scholars along the "Kirkyard" to the River Road. Past another of God's Acres then, and its white Church, to the new-winged old hall, he is minded to come. And later, watching in the distance beyond the hilltop for his homing, we will be remembering that not only in our district, but in communities island-over, mothers, and other grandmother's too, will be eagerly awaiting the new scholar's return: those young couple left on a honeymoon trip to the Cabot Trail. For travelling the bride wore an aqua linen suit and white accessories. Her corsage was of pink roses. A telegram of congratulations was received from Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Memuys, Timmins, Ont. friends of the couple.

Out of province guests were: Avis Zwickler, Toronto, Ont., Mr. and Mrs. Percy Myers, Debbie MacKaye, Mrs. Everett Myers Scarborough, Ont., George Zink Moncton, N. B.; Mr. Arden Wood, Mrs. Lorne Hatfield, Raymond and Betty Ruth Greenwood N. S.; Mr. and Mrs. George Martin, Halifax, N. S.

The couple will reside in Greenwood where the bride is employed at Soldiers Memorial Hospital and the groom is stationed with the Royal Canadian Air Force. (Photo by the Craft Studios) young "first year" lads and lassies with the wonder look still in their eyes.

"Now this, Ellen" James said, looking up today from the book we had just put down, "is interesting! Yes, there are tales in it, I have often heard back in the years, and had almost forgotten."

"I like it too" Alex agreed. "I enjoy the eerie stories. They are thrilling!" This is "Legends of Prince Edward Island" from the pen of F. H. MacArthur, a native son, a copy of which came to Alderlea recently. Its author is to be congratulated for presenting his legends so well as to make interesting reading for both old and young. And commended for collecting them, to preserve them for generations of Islanders yet to come. Too many stories and much history has been regrettably lost in the graves of our pioneering forebears. All can find entertainment in this book's pages, as well as a history of the past: exciting glimpses of the life and living in those Island times now long bygone. With James we would join with other readers who have found much to entertain and educate in this book, in extending best wishes to Mr. MacArthur for continued success in his craft, and we would hope other books from his pen in the years ahead!

Rose and crimson, orange and purple - so full of enchantment these evenings, the August sunsets are. We watch the play of colors mount, and spread, and fade to the pastels of the afterglow, against the silver of the advancing night. And the shadows spill in over the gentled hills. And presently, another day is spent.

Until tomorrow - - - Diary - - - Good-night.
