Chinese Forces In Tibet Larger Than One Year Ago

By HENRY S. BRADSHER

NEW DELHI (AP) — Military positions in the Himalayas and diplomatic positions in Peking and New Delhi have changed considerably in the year since Communist China attacked India.

China now has more strike power poised on its Tibetan frontier with India than it did Oct. 20, 1962, when its one-month invasion began, Indian intelligence reports say.

But China is no longer able to hope for Russian help in a conflict with India. Conceivably, the worsening relations between Peking and Moscow may divert Chinese attention from India, although they could instead anger Peking into striking this way.

India is building up its overall military strength but is still fairly weak in Himalayan border areas. The defences lie in a depth that might check any new Chinese attack only after more losses of territory.

The Chinese already control some 14,000 square miles of bleakly mountainous terrain that both Peking and New Delhi say is theirs. Most of this was seized by Chinese troops between 1956 and last Oct. 20. Major fighting began then after weak Indian forces tried to halt Chinese encroachments and regain some ground.

BADLY BEATEN

The Indian army was badly beaten before the Chinese voluntarily called a cease-fire. An official post mortem said the army had been poorly led, inadequately trained and improperly equipped.

Now the leadership has changed somewhat, training is oriented toward fighting in the Himalayas and better equipment is being supplied slowly.

An ordnance factory, which ousted Defence Minister V. K. Krishna Menon had put to work making espresso coffee machines, now is turning out the first Indian - made semi - automatic rifles at a rate approaching 2,500 a month. Other factories make 5,000 bolt-action rifles a month.

It will take a long time to re-equip an army that is almost doubling in size to some 1,000,000 men by 1965. Part of the equipment is coming from abroad, including 58,000 British semi-automatic rifles.

At Nassau last December the United States agreed to provide $60,000,000 worth of arms aid to India while Britain, Canada and Australia provide $60,000,000 more. Most of this now has been delivered and continued American help has been budgeted.

NOT SO QUICK

Russian aid was not so quick coming but now is assuming growing importance. Russia is expected to supply anti-aircraft missiles and a factory to make them, plus factories for MiG-21 supersonic jet fighters.

The Soviet newspaper Pravda recently told Peking not to expect any Russian help against India. Pravda all but called China the aggressor in this situation.

One of the most tempting places for the Chinese to hit is India's Northeast Frontier Agency, scene of the biggest Chinese victory last year and still only lightly defended. Another is the 60-mile stretch of Indian - defended territory between the Chumbi Valley of southern Tibet and the east Pakistan border, since its capture by China would pinch off northeast India from the rest of the country.

Prime Minister Nehru's government might be pinched, too, and be replaced by a more martial Indian cabinet. China could conceivably attack mainly for this reason, since Chinese leaders have a bitter personal hatred of the long-time leader of non-alignment.

If China does attack again, and if it uses air power this time, the United States and Britain are committed morally although not on paper to fly air defence for India. An American F-100 squadron and a British Javelin squadron are coming to India in a few weeks to train for such an emergency.

Air Of Urgency Marks Centennial Planning

By ALAN DONNELLY

OTTAWA (CP) — In an atmosphere of urgency, 60 Canadians have met here to discuss plans for Canada's 100th birthday celebration in 1967.

They were told about some of the projects already afoot—a centennial train, a massive educational travel scheme for young Canadians, cultural developments, and the building of lasting memorials.

There were also the first provincial murmurs urging greater financial help by the federal government for provincial celebrations.

It was the first meeting of the National Centennial Conference, an advisory body set up only last week under legislation passed in 1961. It includes two federal ministers, 20 provincial government representatives and 30 representative citizens.

"Time is short," said Privy Council President Maurice Lamontagne, conference chairman, as he opened the two-day meeting.

The note of urgency was echoed by several provincial representatives including British Columbia Provincial Secretary W. D. Black, who said: "Now is the time for action."

WORKING FOUR YEARS

Federal Forestry Minister Nicholson, vice - chairman, said federal planners and politicians have been working on plans for more than four years.

"We now have only three effective years remaining in which to round out these plans and to complete the job."

Officials outlined a plan for federal grants to the provinces totalling $1 for every Canadian, to finance one-third of the cost of permanent projects chosen by provincial governments.

John Fisher, commissioner of the national centennial administration, said these projects could be a park, a building, or even a work of art, music or sculpture, so long as two-thirds of the finances were raised in the provinces and the project had "a reasonable chance" of being completed by 1967.

Alberta Provincial Secretary Ambrose Holowach said the $1 per capita grant would be "totally inadequate."

Following opening statments, the conference went behind closed doors for the rest of its two-day meeting.

Aid Is Urged For Displaced Railway Workers

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian railways should use some of the money saved through automation and various forms of streamlining to assist their displaced workers, the Commons railways committee has been told.

A. R. Gibbons, secretary of the national legislative committee of the International Railway Brotherhoods, said the railway workers are "the only ones being adversely affected" by railway changes.

"All we ask is that part of the savings be applied to those who are being hurt through no fault of their own."

Mr. Gibbons headed a group of union spokesmen answering committee questions on a brief tabled by the unions last week in support of a bill, introduced in the Commons early this session by Douglas Fisher (NDP—Port Arthur), that would amend the Railway Act to provide for compensation to workers dislocated by automation.

The bill would enable the worker, at company expense, to retrain himself for other work, move to a new job, and regain the value of property that becomes valueless as a result of the company's action in abandoning services in an area dependent on its presence.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1♥	Pass	1♠ (!)	Pass
2♥	Pass	3♥	Pass
4♥

Opening lead — seven of clubs. This hand was played in a team match. Whether North should have succeeded with his skulduggery in responding to the judgement of the reader, but there is no doubt that his psychic was effective.

East passed the spade response — he probably should have risked an overcall of two diamonds despite the weakness of the suit — and from then on found it difficult to enter the auction.

West led a club and east took the ace and returned the six of clubs. This was poor play on East's part — the king of spades return could scarcely do any harm — and the outcome was that South made four hearts, losing a spade, a diamond and a club. He could have been defeated one trick if the defense had cashed two spades right away.

The bidding went quite differently when the hand was replayed at the second table. It was brief but decisive. It went:

South	West	North	East
1heart	Dble.	3 heart	6spade

Six spades was not the ideal contract for East-West — six diamonds, which was practically a lrydown, would have been far better — but declarer managed to make the slam anyhow.

He ruffed the heart lead, drew two rounds of trumps, and then cashed five diamond tricks, ending in his own hand. Now down to three clubs and two spades in each hand, he played a low club towards the jack in dummy.

South took the king, but then, rather than give declarer a ruff and discard, he returned a low club. East guessed correctly by putting on the jack from dummy and thus made six spades.

The result was that his team gained 1,850 points on the deal —having bid and made a vulnerable slam (worth 1,430 points) with the East-West cards, after his teammates had bid and made a game (worth 420 points) with the North-South cards.
