

Personal-Gossip.

Sir John McDonald has returned to his residence at Stadacona hall. He will return next summer to Earncliffe, which he has purchased, and which will in the meantime be fitted up for his permanent residence.

Sir Andrew Agnew was famous for giving broad hints. The nature of them will be best ascertained by the following anecdote: Sir Andrew having for some time been pestered by an impertinent intruder, it was one day remarked to the baronet that this man no longer appeared in his company, and he was asked how he contrived to get rid of him. "In truth," said the baronet, "I was obliged to give the chiel a broad hint." "A broad hint?" replied the friend. "I thought he was one of those who could not take a hint." By my faith! he was forced to take it," answered Sir Andrew; "for as the fellow would not go out by the door, I threw him out of the window."

Curious chance brought face to face the other day two famous persons, who had not met before for many years, nor perhaps wished to. The Duc d'Annam was going from Chantilly to Paris, and as usual retained a private compartment in the train. Going to the train and seeing a carriage marked "reserved," he took for granted that it was his own, and entered, only to find it occupied by two ladies. With an exclamation of surprise he was about to turn to the guard for an explanation when he recognized the supposed in r ders as the ex-Empress Eugenie and the Duchess de Mouchy, who were on their way to the death bed of General Ney. The Duc bowed and hastily withdrew in confusion, to find his own compartment elsewhere.

Leopold Stapleaux, in a sketch just published, tells a curious story of a visit he once made to Julien. The maestro had invited Stapleaux to dine with him, alone. It was before any one had suspected Julien of madness, and Stapleaux went, unsuspecting. When the dinner was over, Julien suddenly turned up the bottom of his trousers' leg, showed his guest a swollen vein on his ankle, and asked if he knew what it meant. On receiving a negative reply from the astonished Stapleaux, he said it was the secret mark of the Vatican, and meant that he should soon be made Pope. Then he drew a pistol and declared his intention to shoot Stapleaux dead, lest he should betray his secret. Being convinced that he was in the power of a maniac, Stapleaux summoned up all his wits, and begged for a few moments in which to prepare for death. This being granted, he sprang to the piano and began to play a wild waltz. The music penetrated the brain of the mad maestro, and he began to dance furiously. His intended victim watched his opportunity, slipped out of the room, locked the door behind him, and fled for life to the prefect of police, by whose orders Julien was quickly secured and placed in an asylum.
