SOME ODD STORIES.

INTERESTING TALES OF ADVENTURE ON SEA AND LAND.

An Awful Situation—The Sea Captain's Story—A Case Where the Mind Was Questioned Than the Hand—The Inmate Russian Sailor.

"What I am about to relate," said Captain Gordon of the American bark Orient as we sat at dinner a few days ago, "happened last February and in this year of grace 1893, but if I should live to be as old as the antediluvian patriarchs that last voyage from Hong-Kong must ever remain as vivid in my mind as if it ended yesterday."

"Only shipmasters and merchants interested in our carrying trade were in the vicinity of keeping a crew in a foreign port, even when they have contracted for a return voyage. Sailors who may be fairly responsible in American ports often become worthless, drunken wretches in the east. Desertions are common, and frequently the most careful captain will find himself suddenly short-handed on the eve of his departure. This was my condition when early last February I had finished taking in cargo and was waiting for the turn of the tide to hoist sail and head for San Francisco."

"Three of the men on whom I had relied most were missing, and as I could not wait for them I decided to visit our consular agent and see if he could help me out. I found at the consulate two men who were ready to ship. One was a Sandwich Island Kanaka, and as these men are usually good sailors I shipped him on his own terms at once. The other was a tall, dark bearded, powerfully built Russian of 40 who spoke fairly good English, and he had the indescribable something about him which to my trained eyes told that he was an able and efficient seaman. His name was Nitski. He had been in hospital with brain fever, so he said, but was now quite well, and his papers showed that his character was above the average. Nitski was anxious to get back to Riga in Russia, but on my showing him that his chances of doing so from San Francisco were better than from Hong-Kong he decided to sign and go on board with me."

"I had with me my wife and daughter, the latter a girl of 17, who had broken down a bit from overwork, which was my reason for giving her a six months' cruise. We had a doctor and pleasant weather till we reached the one hundred and seventh meridian west from Greenwich, when we plunged into a gale from the north-west, and the sea became so furious and when the white caps up as high as the foremast."

"The third day of the storm my wife and I were on deck to get a breath of fresh air, for the cabin had become foul and stifling, and I went out with 12 hours of continuous watching, went below to get some sleep. "The third day of the storm my wife and I were on deck to get a breath of fresh air, for the cabin had become foul and stifling, and I went out with 12 hours of continuous watching, went below to get some sleep."

"I was relieved by the first officer, and as I descended the companionway I saw that Nitski had just relieved the man at the wheel. Up to this time the Russian's conduct more than equalled my expectations. Although very nervous and not inclined to be familiar with his shipmates, he was not sullen, and he was alert and prompt in executing all commands, so that while I was resting—this was about 11 in the afternoon—I felt comforted by the thought that the right man was at the helm."

"I had been asleep about an hour and a half when I was awakened by continuous rapping at my stateroom door. "Hello!" I called out as I sprang to the door and began hastily dressing. "Who is there?" "It's me!" replied my wife in tones full of agony. "I noticed that the ship was pitching so that I could hardly keep my feet, and from the loud flapping of the sails and the swish and crash of loosened ropes I felt that the vessel was in some danger. I went to the pump into the eye of the wind."

"With a white, haggard face my wife reeled in and stammered as she fell fainting into my arms. "Lola, Lola!" I laid my wife in the berth from which I had just risen, and hastily summoned the stewardess to go to her. I fairly flew to the deck. On reaching there I needed no one to tell me what had happened. "There was no man at the helm. The officers and crew stood in a frightened group at the head of the companionway, and aft near the wheel stood the Russian, his right hand holding aloft a long, glittering knife and his left arm encircling Lola's waist. "The brave girl was pale, as you may well believe, but she retained her presence of mind, making no effort to rear away and speaking soothingly to the wild-eyed man who held her. "At such times a minute is an age, and a man's mind works faster than the proverbial lightning. I took a step toward the Russian, but he was quick to detect me. "Come one foot nearer!" he shouted with a hoarse voice, and I felt the knife as it bit into the girl's heart, and I'll kill her and leap overboard with her! "You mustn't do that, Nitski, I am your friend and my daughter's your friend. Come, let me send a man to the wheel, or better still, take it yourself! "The wheel is mine. You interfere, and you die!" he hissed, and carrying the poor girl on his arm as if she had been a scarf he took a step toward me. "All this while the ship was at the mercy of the sea, and if something were not done, and that speedily, to change affairs the chances were that the Orient would be thrown on her beam ends, and that would be the last of us. "Captain, I am a good shot. I have a pistol here. Let me risk a crack at him. It is our only chance. "On hearing this I looked round and saw Courtney, the second mate and an old man of war's man, kneeling and with a revolver resting on the top of the poop steps. "My God! I exclaimed in desperation. Try it, but do not kill him if you can help it! "The last word had scarcely left my lips when the crack of the pistol rang out. The Russian reared his head on the girl, the knife fell flying to the deck, and the next instant he dropped in a heap. "Quicker than I can tell, the first mate was at the wheel, and I had Lola in my arms. "Courtney's fortunate bullet had cut along the Russian's scalp and stunned him, but before consciousness returned, we had him in irons and so kept him till we reached San Francisco."

arms in front of him, to the no small anger of the eyes and ribs of the passenger. Suddenly he was brought to a standstill, and so wonder for in flourishing his arms about him he thrust one of his hands right into the pocket of a man who was going past. "Hello! So young and so wicked!" cried the man, turning about and seizing the boy. "You little rascal. Do you want to pick my pocket in broad daylight?" "No, I don't want to pick your pocket," said the boy, starting about him as if just waking from a dream. "I—I thought I was swimming!" laughed the man. "Well, I have heard of a sea of people, but I never knew that any one ever tried to swim in it. You are getting me in a lie or else you are crazy. Which is it?" "I'm neither," protested the boy. "I was thinking of Leander, who swam across the Hellespont, and it seemed to me as if I was swimming across it too."

"Oh, that's it, eh?" "Yes, sir." "Did you see any of the crew?" "I'd read all day long if I could," said the boy, "but I've only a few books, and I've read them over and over again." "What?" said the man, now much interested. "I have an offer to make you." "What is that, sir?" "It belongs to a library, and if you like I will give you a ticket of admission for six months. Here is my address, and he handed the boy his card. "And the stranger, smiling at this strange adventure, shook hands with the boy and went on. He little dreamed that he would live to see that lad honored by all England as one of her greatest poets. Yet he lived to tell his friends with pride of his first meeting with Samuel Taylor Coleridge."

Couldn't Give It Up. Mike Harrigan enlisted in the Tenth Ohio at the breaking out of the war. The regiment soon distinguished itself at Car-nifex Ferry under Rosecrans, and subsequently it was known through the western army by the name of "The Bloody Tenth," a self imposed title of which the gallant Irishman felt not a little proud. Mike as he delights to be called, for he once held that rank for a week, was a gallant fellow, and he was never under arrest or sent to the guardhouse except for intoxication. When drunk, which was not an unusual event in Mike's experience, he imagined himself in command of the regiment and acted accordingly. A short time before the Tenth was mustered out, Mike Harrigan received a severe wound that broke the bones of his leg between the knee and the hip. The wound never thoroughly healed, owing to Mike's habits, though he tried to work at his trade of bricklayer when he came home."

At last Mike found himself incapacitated for work, and through his friends he was sent to the Soldiers' home at Dayton. He was at once taken to the hospital, and the doctor, who had known him of old, said after examining the leg: "Mike, it isn't the wound; it is whisky that keeps the leg sore." "You don't tell me so!" cried Mike in surprise. "It is true nevertheless. And now, Mike, I am going to give you a choice. "Pot is that, doctor?" "You must either give up whisky or the leg." "Do you mean it, doctor?" "I was never more in earnest in my life." "Well, begorra," said Mike after a pause, "that leg's been a bother to me these many years, and if it's good now so that it can't shand a drop of good whisky like the rest of me body, off wid it!"

The For Tat. There is a certain Episcopal church in one of the mansion wards of Brooklyn that rather prides itself on the wealth and fashion and lofty exclusiveness of its congregation. This church is away out of sight in the highness of its services. It is high indeed that some of the old conservative members were forced to withdraw. A few years ago the rector, who, though thought to be a very high churchman by every one else, was regarded as rather low by his parishioners, succeeded in finding another and a more congenial church to which he transferred his services. After much deliberation on the part of the vestrymen it was decided in order to secure a genuine, unadorned high churchman to send to Oxford, England, the headquarters of the movement—for a clergyman about whom there could not be the slightest doubt. In due time a tall, dapper, smooth shaven young man, with the clerical uniform and eyeglasses and a genuine English drawl, was imported and placed in charge of the parish. Except to Anglicanize the manners of this callow cleric were disgusting offensive to his parishioners. One evening at a social gathering he was introduced to a Baptist clergyman noted for his ready wit. Taking the Baptist's name, the Englishman said condescendingly: "Ah, Mr. Bond, glad to meet you, I'm sure. I can believe you are a gentleman, but in my position I cannot recognize you as a clergyman."

Quick as a flash came the reply: "And I am glad to shake hands with you as a clergyman, though I cannot admit that you are a gentleman!"

Lower London Bay, N. S., July 3.—Mr. Samuel Locke, of this place, has just discovered a gold mine here that pans out 100 per cent. of pure metal to the ton. It was a rich vein of sound health to which he was restored, by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and which he would not exchange for any other mine in America. All last winter he suffered from kidney trouble which would not yield to the prescriptions of several doctors. A few months ago Mr. Locke heard of the good work done by Dodd's Kidney Pills and tried them with the invariable result. To-day he is well and thinks no praise too great for this wonderful remedy. His neighbors are much interested in what they describe as a marvelous cure. Take time by the forelock, and Putter's Emulsion by the spoonful, and your cough will vanish and your rosy cheeks return.

Mothers, Does the housework tire you? If so, ask yourself the reason why. Is there a means by which the WEARINESS and the DREAD can be removed? Do the words of friends and the experience of others influence you? There is reason why they should. They are constituted as you are. Relief to them is relief to you. The case of Mrs. Elizabeth Hamilton, of Milford, St. John, has many a parallel. Consider it. This lady, whose portrait appears above these lines, suffered four years from that com-mon complaint, Dyspepsia—accompanied, of course, by its train of ill—flatulency, constipation, nervousness, loss of appetite. And she tried eight physicians during that time. Last autumn she was induced to "experiment" with a popular local remedy—"Groder Syrup." Of this medicine she says: "It has helped me as nothing else ever did; it made my work lighter and easier because it regulated my stomach and GAVE ME NEW LIFE. Does such evidence appeal to you? It should. There is health and healing in this remedy for Dyspepsia. Disordered stomachs are the direct cause of countless ills that kill."

The Telephone Company P. E. ISLAND. Parties using the telephone would find talking much more satisfactory if they would observe the following rules: 1st. Speak with the mouth about four inches from the transmitter. 2nd. Speak in a moderate tone of voice, not too loud, and distinctly. 3rd. Place the telephone so as to cover the ear of the person to whom you are speaking. Do not press too hard on the ear. It is possible to talk and be heard when standing back two or three feet from the transmitter, if you do not talk too loudly, but it is not a pleasant mode of conversation, is entirely unnecessary, and is a useless waste of wind and breath. It is better to speak very distinctly within range of your voice. ROBERT ANGLUS, Manager.
