ELLEN'S DIARY

Farmers At Alderlea Are Busy With The Shearing

And it was up and away to the shearing for the farmers at Alderlea today. To the other farm, where the main flock is summering on a pasture, which rises in a gentle slope above the stream. It is an ideal spot. James spoke of it at dinner. And recalled that in his young years at the farming, a butcher from the city came by, by horse and wagon, and bought without having first inspected them, a parcel of lambs from him, remarking "They'll be good ones I know, pasturing there by the stream!"

"And" Mack hearing, grinned, "did he ever buy others from you?"

"Oh yes — and fat cattle too" James nodded. All the children from the house across the lane, Peter excepted, went with the farmers, including Granddaughter, who would be of assistance in helping round the flock to the pen.

"Perhaps" James suggested with a twinkle to her "you'll try your hand at the shearing? I can remember that on some farms in the long ago, it was regarded as women's work. The men did the farming in the fields."

"And sometimes" we recalled "because there was no marketing of unwashed wool those times, the fleeces were washed down by a brook" we said. "The water was heated in an iron pot over an open fire, and the clean wool spread to try on the grass nearby, or on the rails of a fence."

"And later the women manufactured what they had saved for the needs of the home. They spun the rolls from the carding-mill-or sometimes they carded it themselves, and spun and wove the druggets and flannels" James remembered.

"And knit—and knit" we said.

Besides the shears, the sacks and the twine carried, a lunch was taken "in case we get hungry", a few "Funnies" in the event "we are idle" and she took a book "to pass any spare time away."

And this place lapsed into that strange silence which prevails, when most of the family is absent. No steps, young or older were about. No "sound of a going" anywhere. Scampie, missing them, kept watch in a quiet which gave us the echoes of the outside world entering ur valley, and the hollow crow of a rooster, the bleat of a lambkin, the low of a cow. And once Tabby's mew begging for a lunch, at the door.

"The kittens eyes aren't open yet" Alex reported before leaving. "Queer too, isn't it? Chickens, and calves, little pigs and goats — why, when you think of it, just about everything eise can see when they come!"

Now the great Oriental poppies are attractive, the scarlet blooms of the old plants we have, lending a brightness to our days — The banks of the stream by the lane-bridge are gay with buttercups.

"Do you like butter?" Granddaughter queried with a chuckle, holding one today beneath Peter's young chin.

He smiled widely, happily, pleased with the attention.

And our day, smiles — and goes.

Until tomorrow — Diary— Good-night.....

Space-Needle Ashtrays Are Girl's Business

By JIM PEACOCK

SEATTLE (CP)—Leona Sidler is a non-smoker who says she has no intention of starting the cigarette habit.

But she's hoping to clean up on ashtrays.

"I've never smoked," said the Saskatchewan - born Miss Sidler, who grew up in Oliver, B.C. "But in my work I've had to clean a lot of ashtrays."

The 33-year-old hazel-eyed blonde spent a dozen years in office work, first as secretary-receptionist to a doctor in Oliver and then, for eight years, as secretary in oil company offices in Calgary.

She came to Seattle 1½ years ago, planning to stop by the sea for several months while working her way to points farther south, possibly South America.

Now, however, her association with ashtrays—she heads a company here producing two-foot-high space needle ashtrays for sale as souvenirs of the World's Fair—is likely to keep her in Seattle indefinitely.

The metal floor - model ashtray is patterned after the 600-foot-high space needle that towers over the Century 21 fair grounds here.

WORKED NEAR FAIR

"The idea just struck me and I pursued it," Miss Sidler said in an interview.

It struck her as she worked as secretary to a promotion firm which had offices on the fourth floor of a building near the fair grounds. From her office she watched the daily progress of construction of the space needle.

Then one day while emptying an office ashtray, the idea struck.

She sought out designers Herb Manifior and Joe Papineau at the University of Washington, obtained permission from Space Needle Incorporated to proceed with the plan and raised the financial backing to start production. In the first run, 10,000 of the metal ashtrays were turned out.

The attractive Miss Sidler, born in Munroe, Sask., near Yorkton, and raised in Oliver where she was a high school basketball player and a soprano in the South Okanagan Choral Society, said she hopes the idea will bring in some profits.

"But anyway," she added, "I've gained a wealth of experience from it all."

THE EXPERTS SAY

Danger Of Food Poison Increases In Summer

TORONTO (CP) — Mothers who worry about food poisoning in the summer should relax.

Experts at the poison control centre of the Hospital for Sick Children here say food poisoning is rare at anytime and it doesn't occur more frequently in summer than in winter.

Nevertheless, strawberry shortcake and other creamy delights should not be left out in the open too long, especially when there are people around.

Dairy products, particularly cream puddings and whipped cream, at warm temperatures (above 45 degrees) are fertile foods for the development of staphylococci, bacteria which when eaten can result in attacks of nausea, vomiting, diarrhea and abdominal pain within 2½ to three hours.

These bacteria, found in our skin and throats, escape to the air when we breathe.

Meat, fish and fowl must be kept refrigerated because any type of raw muscle fibre at warm temperatures supports bacterial growth.

KEEP IT COLD

With refrigeration and common sense, housewives can take many precautions to keep foods free from the risk of causing bacterial food poisoning.

Don't buy frozen food unless it is fully frozen at the time of purchase. And if something that has been frozen has been allowed to thaw don't try to refreeze it.

Frozen foods prepared with eggs, meat, milk or gravy should be served within two hours or be refrigerated. Leftovers should be refrigerated until being reheated or served again.

Salads, especially with potato, chicken, salmon, shrimp and pork, should be prepared only a short time before serving and even then kept under refrigeration in shallow layers until served. Extra amounts of these salads should never be kept for any length of time.

Preparing picnic sandwiches in advance is a time-saver but they should be eaten within four hours of the time they are removed from refrigeration.

MARY HAWORTH

Couple Feels That Friend Takes Advantage Of Them

Dear Mary Haworth: We were three couples living in the same block for a great many years.

Around five years ago one of the couples bought a house in the suburbs about 50 miles away. On an average of every two or three weeks, we drive out there for a sort of barbecue picnic for adults only.

The other couple that still lives here goes with us in our car. They have a car, a much newer model than ours, but they never suggest using it. After five years of this, we have reached the point of wanting to tell them either to take their car or pay for some gas. Just how does one say it without causing hard feeling?

They have no children and both are employed. We have three children and pay a baby sitter when we make these visits.

We aren't the only ones they use in this fashion. They go all over, but never invite anyone to their home. It is almost as if they are afraid their rugs might be soiled if someone steps on them. I am a very fed-up friend. — B.Y.

Dear B.Y.: You should have renegotiated this car pool matter long since, if the going arrangement was getting under your skin. Don't blame the spongers for your mistake in being too chicken to speak up for your concept of fair play.

I would consider it a simple matter to put your cards on the table, provided, of course, that you have the requisite strength of character and elementary self-confidence to take a right stand because it is right, without fretting fearfully as to what that stand may cost you in terms of popularity with fair weather friends.

For example, who initiates the idea, each time, that the neighbors are to ride in your car? Do you, because you think they expect it? Or do they, in a take-it-for-grated spirit? If you've been beckoning them, stop it. Hereafter, don't make a move or say a word that suggests you will be hauling them.

That puts them on the spot. If they call to check your plans for the trip, say lightly (in effect): "How about we go in your car for a change? Turn about is fair play and we'll let you fight the traffic this trip—."

If the neighbors say stiffly that their car is out of commission just now, you say smoothly: "Well then, come along and ride in our bus as usual and we will let you buy the gas for a change." Then with a giggle: "Anything for a change, you know, after five years of the same old routine."

That ought to do it, without giving them a shred of excuse for taking offense. If they do get mad and bypass you and go in their own car, don't abase yourselves to them. Be pleasant, unruffled, incurious as to what's eating them.

Remain blandly oblivious to their mean sulking, bad manners and poor sportsmanship, if it comes to that. Let the friendship drop, if that's how they want it.

Incidentially, these self-enclosed people (as described by you) are a familiar type in the urban scene: childless couple, both employed, who maintain a sort of dummy household — like a stage setting— nicely furnished but never used for really living. In their empty scheme of things, even their car is more of a status-symbol than a piece of equipment to be fully used, it appears.

Their real friends (if any) would be doing them a favor in jarring them into recognition of the fact that they are subservient to their property as to a sacred cow, instead of comfortably exercising the upperhand in relation to it.— M.H.

Science Now Shrinks Piles Without Pain Or Discomfort
Finds Healing Substance That Relieves Pain And Itching As It Shrinks Hemorrhoids

Toronto, Ont. (Special)—For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the ability to shrink hemorrhoids and to relieve pain and itching. Thousands have been relieved with this inexpensive substance right in the privacy of their own home without any discomfort or inconvenience.

In one hemorrhoid case after another, "very striking improvement" was reported and verified by doctors' observations.

Pain was promptly relieved. And while gently relieving pain, actual reduction or retraction (shrinking) took place.

And most amazing of all—this improvement was maintained in cases where doctors' observations were continued over a period of many months!

In fact, results were so thorough that sufferers were able to make such statements as "Piles have ceased to be a problem!" And among these sufferers were a very wide variety of hemorrhoid conditions, some of even 10 to 20 years' standing.

All this, without the use of narcotics, anesthetics or astringents of any kind. The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne) — the discovery of a famous scientific institute. Already, Bio-Dyne is in wide use for healing injured tissue on all parts of the body.

This new healing substance is offered in suppository or ointment form called Preparation H. Ask for individually sealed convenient Preparation H Suppositories or Preparation H ointment with special applicator. Preparation H is sold at all drug stores. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded.
