A VISIT Chapter 60

"The only thing Pan could find to carry hot to the invalid was some thick celery soup. She heated this as much as possible with a lavish addition of cream and poured it into a Thermos bottle. Then she pulled an old fur cloak of Gloria's over her shoulders, half wished she had on her cream colored silk which was so becoming—decided that if she stopped to change it would be coquetry, whereas now it was merely a friendly errand—and slipped out of the house.

She was so much in earnest over her errand that she took a taxi, an unheard-of extravagance for her, so George could have his supper that much sooner.

George had phoned downstairs to the hall boy of the apartment house to let her in—she found him sitting in a little pool of lamp light at the big table in his studio, with books and newspapers scattered over table and floor and the rest of the huge place in a friendly sort of gloom.

Dunham Says He Wants All To Read Story

Moncton Resident Declares Everybody Ought to Know About Tanlac and Tells How it Restored His Own Health

"I am so grateful for what Tanlac did for me I want to tell everybody about this great medicine," said A. S. Dunham, 111 High St., Moncton, N.B. "I had the flu, followed by pleurisy and bronchitis, and was so weak I could hardly get about and so nervous I shook like a leaf. Severe headaches came upon me and I got so dizzy it was hard to stand up. I had almost no appetite and the little I did force down gave me no nourishment. It was next to impossible for me to get a good night's rest and when morning came I was simply all in. My first three bottles of Tanlac made me feel like a new man. My appetite is now so fine that my biggest trouble is trying to satisfy it. I sleep soundly and have plenty of energy and strength. I am certainly thankful I tried Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

"The girl wondered at this answer it seemed to reflect a trifle upon Gloria. She looked closely at George—who did indeed seem very ill. Whatever tiny resentment she felt vanished at once, she threw her cape over a chair and went into the dining room to find a bowl for the hot soup.

One of the big armchairs was placed at end of the long table. An exquisite lace and linen scarf was thrown across the polished dark oak, coffee in a percolator needed only a light to begin its heating. Gloria, who could not meat everything his servants could think of to tempt him in their absence was ready there.

George watched her through the arched doorway. She seemed so at home as she found a tray, and arranged the meal, and as she went back and forth from the butler's pantry, where scalding hot water was ready to heat the plates.

When she carried in the tray, he ate all the hot soup and cold supper with a perfectly healthy appetite, let her put an extra cushion under the bandaged ankle, sent her up to the balcony for a fresh supply of cigarettes and then leaned back in the armchair, feet on a stool, hands limply on the chair arms, the cigarette he rarely puffed at held between his fingers.

Pan carried away the tray and the coffee, and came back again. "I feel awkward now for the first time," she said. "That's because I've nothing to do."

"Now you must sit down on that little stool where I can look at you, and let me amuse you, to pay back for all your nice attentions to me," George said.

Pan sat down obediently, folded her arms around her knees, remembering that was ungraceful and clasped her hands in her lap.

"Don't try to sit in a dignified attitude in an undignified chair," George said. "You look best when you forget yourself Pan, and on that stool you look very much like a quaint little girl who lived a century ago. I'm going to paint you that way—some time."

"Pan, do you know I think you must be the ideal woman?" His eyes were smiling and the mouth that was usually cynical was whimsical.

"Why?" Pan asked. "You look as though you were laughing at me!" "Bah, now you're spolling things by getting self conscious! I said that because Aunt Harriet would have had no sympathy for me this evening. She would have said, and been perfectly right, that if I shouldn't have sent the servants out, and if I intended to be cross and not answer the telephone all day. I shouldn't complain of lonely children 25 cents. If day proves unfavorable races will be held next fine day following. Come everybody as a good time is assured."

"I know that," Pan said so innocently serious that George burst out into a genuine laugh. "Then you're very logical for a woman!" he decided.

The girl went back to her original puzzle. "Why did you tell me when I came in that I was too much under Gloria's influence?" she asked. "I suppose I am greatly influenced by her—but wouldn't it be a good influence? She's so wonderful in every way."

George smiled a little. "Hand me that box of matches—that's it, thanks. Now go sit down on your stool and be a good girl and listen. I'm going to tell you a lot of things about yourself."

Pan felt her heart beat excitedly as she looked at him.

"GIRLS DO THE WOOING."

The last ten years or so have seen a drastic change in the custom of "keeping company," going with the boys, wooing and marrying, writes Lauretta Joy. The change began gradually, but went on so rapid a rate that all of a sudden folks who were watching this development and thinking about it, were forced to these conclusions: Boys no longer woo girls; girls woo them. In a very few years all proposing will be done by girls.

Why do men no longer woo? What proof is there that they do not? What will grow out of it? If the ideals of the past generation as regards courting and marriage should be brought back, how will we go about accomplishing it?

George smiled a little. "Hand me that box of matches—that's it, thanks. Now go sit down on your stool and be a good girl and listen. I'm going to tell you a lot of things about yourself."

Pan felt her heart beat excitedly as she looked at him.
