The beautiful, remorseless sky was one vault of purple, with a great flaming jewel in the center, whose vertical rays struck, and parched, and scorched the living sufferers, and blistered and baked the boat itself, so that it hurt their hot hands to touch it; the beautiful remorseless ocean was one sheet of glass, that glared in their bloodshot eyes, and reflected the intolerable heat of heaven upon those poor wretches who were gawped to death with hunger, and their raging thirst was fierce still.

Toward the afternoon of the eighth day McIntosh dipped a vessel in the sea, with the manifest intention of drinking the salt water.

"Stop him!" cried Hazel, in great agitation, and the others seized him and overpowered him. He cursed them with such horrible curses that Miss Rolleston put her fingers in her ears, and shuddered from head to foot. Even this was new to her, to hear foul language.

A calm voice rose in their midst, and said:
"Let us pray!"

FOUL PLAY.

By Charles Reade.
CHAPTER XIX.

We return to the cutter and her living freight.
After an anxious but brief consultation, it was agreed that their best chance was to traverse as many miles of water as possible, while the wind was fair; by this means they would increase their small chance of being picked up, and also of falling in with land, and would, at all events, sail into a lovely climate, where intense cold was unknown, and gales of wind uncommon.

Mr. Hazel advised them to choose a skipper, and give him absolute power, especially over the provisions. They assented to this. He then recommended Cooper for that post. But they had not fathomed the sterling virtues of that taciturn seaman; so they offered the command to Welch instead.

"Me put myself over Sam Cooper!" said he; "not likely."
Then their choice fell on Michael Morgan.
The other sailors' names were Prince, Fenner and Mackintosh.

Mr. Hazel urged Morgan to put the crew and passengers on short allowance at once, viz., two biscuits a day, and four table-spoonsful of water; but Morgan was a common sailor; he could not see clearly very far ahead; and, moreover, his own appetite counteracted this advice. He dealt out a pound of biscuit and an ounce of ham to each person, night and morning, and a pint of water in course of the day.

Mr. Hazel declined his share of the ham, and begged Miss Rolleston so earnestly not to touch it that she yielded a silent compliance.

There was a dead silence, and Mr. Hazel kneeled down and prayed aloud and fervently; and while he prayed the furious cries subsided for awhile, and deep groans only were heard. He prayed for food, for rain, for wind, for patience.

The men were not so far gone but they could just manage to say, "Amen." He rose from his knees, and gathered the pale faces of the men together in one glance, and saw that intense expression of agony which physical pain can mould with men's features; and then he strained his eyes over the brassy horizon, but no cloud, no veil of vapor was visible.

Water, water everywhere, but not a drop to drink.

Read This Twice.
A correspondent sends us the following quotations:—

"Strong drink and drunkenness are two of the greatest curses which we know of. They unfit a man for the duties of life, and rob him of eternal happiness. I would almost as soon be a culprit on the gallows, as a rum dealer; and were I a drunkard, another step would make me a fiend incarnate. If we understand the words of Divine inspiration aright, a man cannot be a lover of Christ, and be either a rum-seller or a drunkard.
They are outside the pale of Christianity so long as they commit the heinous crimes of damning others and themselves."—Canon Kingsley.

"Oh think of the terrible crime you commit when you rob yourselves of reason, rob your families of the comforts or necessaries of life, and heap upon yourselves the mortal sin of damning your own souls, and leading others astray by this miserable indulgence in strong drink.
Would to God that every man or woman who deals in, or drinks the poisonous stuff would awake to-morrow morning, determined to have nothing more to do with it."
—Father McGilveray.

"It is to be hoped that a last strong effort will be made to crush the adder. Down with the illegal man destroying deers of this City and Province."—THE EXAMINER.

"Now, tell me what rum will do? It will debase, degrade, imbrute, and damn everything that is noble, bright, glorious and God-like in a human being. There is nothing drink will not do that is vile, debasing, cowardly and hellish."—John B.
Gough.

"Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them."—Isaiah.

"I am sorry to see so many good Irish names on signboards as liquor dealers. It is a disgraceful occupation, unworthy of an Irishman, and especially an Irish Catholic."—Bishop Lee, R. C.

"Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him and maketh him drunken also."—Habakkuk.

"When we look at the immense amount of evil which the manufacture, sale and use of strong drink has accomplished, we can only stand aghast at the horrible picture. When we think of the ruin it has wrought, the misery it has spread, the immortal souls it has carried to destruction, we are led again to ask the solemn and serious question, can we afford it? and the truth compels one answer only; we cannot afford it."—Rev.
John Barwick.

"On every side our eyes are shocked by this fearful monster of drink which seizes hold of its victims amongst both old and young. Amongst all classes this monster exerts a most baleful influence. Those under the influence of intoxicating drinks appear with heads bowed down, often with frames enfeebled, and the bright light of reason extinguished within them. I feel ashamed when I think of the fact when I think that the Government of this professedly christian country, grants licenses to men to sell the cause of all this evil."— Cardinal Newman.

"Alcohol is injurious to the human system. In all its various shapes of whiskey, brandy, etc., it is not in any sense a food. It does not build up the body, and furnishes no material of improvement to our muscular force. Men are better without it entirely. By avoiding it, they often avoid bodily disease, and the risk they run of becoming slaves to a passion ruinous to both body and soul—the passion for strong drink."—Dr. McCallum.

"Children become the unfortunate victims of their parents intemperance.
Thousands of them are lost through the fault of a drunken father or mother.
Everyone present should join in Temperance work, and take the pledge. Would to God every father and mother—not alone of my flock, but all others—would renounce strong drink. Would to God that they would not go into the temptation of getting their heads turned and their hearts brutal-ized by drunkenness. Avoid the rumshops as you would the entrance to the infernal regions. You cannot save your souls by the sale or use of such a soul-destroying evil."—Cardinal Manning.

"I would give little for the christianity of a man 'who putteth the bottle' before his neighbor, and takes pay for that which ruins souls. The man who furnishes the cause of damnation is responsible before God as much as the unfortunate victim of drunkenness, who cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. The cold-blooded member of society who stands aloof from temperance work, and will claim to be respectable, or a christian, is neither the one nor the other.
Viewed from the standpoint of true nobility, he is not even a man."—Rev. Morley Punshon.

"Just so sure as we shall answer at the Bar of God for the deeds done in the body, so sure will the liquor dealer answer for the souls of those he drags to destruction with him. Men could not become drunkards if they could not procure drink. If there were no liquors sold—I mean intoxicating
