CHEESE.

The Montreal Witness remarks: "That the Canadian cheese manufacturer is capable of producing a thoroughly good article has long been an established fact; and he has not failed in time past to secure a full share of the world's custom for his specialty. In proof of this, if any be necessary, it is sufficient to point to the fact that Canada supplies cheese to the British market far in excess of what is imported from all other sources, whether foreign or colonial, combined. In Great Britain, she is, with the comparatively insignificant exception of New Zealand, practically without a rival. But in connection with the exception referred to there is a somewhat humiliating fact to be noticed. Experts in cheese tell us that the Canadian product before exportation is generally equal, and for the most part superior, to that of New Zealand before shipment; yet, strange to say, the latter fetches an average price on the London market denoting a substantial difference in its favor over the Canadian article. Thus in the London Standard of recent date occurs the following quotation: "A substantial demand has been experienced for new qualities of Canadian and United States cheese, and a fair amount of business has been concluded at fifty-two to fifty-four shillings for the finest. New Zealand fifty-eight shillings to sixty shillings. The difference in value is attributed locally to insufficient ventilation while on board ship, where the cheese generates and spoils in flavor, and to injury and deterioration suffered by the Canadian cheese on the outward voyage, due to smashing of the cheese boxes, which are said to be of a character and shape materially unfitted for safe transport of the contents. Surely these are defects which call for immediate remedy. The New Zealand cheese trade is yet in its infancy; it will not long be so, and its rivalry may be expected to be more pronounced year by year. It is possible that the very fact of the distance of sixteen thousand miles inspires the New Zealand packers to greater care. Being near, we slight the task, failing to realize that good ventilation and packing is as much needed for a short voyage as a long one. It is said that much of the mischief of the packing is due to the shape of the box used, and that to adopt the square-shaped New Zealand box would be prejudicial to the factories at present engaged in turning out those of a round shape, and would necessitate considerable change in their manufacturing plant. If that be true it is not sufficient excuse. No loss could be so great as to lose the lead in trade. One thing is plainly implied by the above quotation from the Standard—the British consumer has no use for inferior produce, and the questions of shape and strength of the packing box used become altogether subordinate to the fact.

DEGREES OF GOODNESS.

The Halifax Chronicle makes an appeal to its party to nominate "good men" for the contest, which, it admits, "cannot much longer be delayed." After a column of advice upon various kinds of men who should not be selected; upon wickedness in high places and the evil that detected iniquity brings upon a party, the Chronicle, not wishing to be misunderstood, says:

"We need not pause to remark that by 'good men' we do not mean 'goody, goody men.'"

Not too "good" for practical use. Now, Dr. Russell, for instance, represented the Chronicle's party in the Chronicle's constituency. He was a "good" man, but when his party needed him to apply the whitewash brush, his piety was not troublesome enough to interfere with what he supposed to be his party's interests. He was a "good" man, but not "goody, goody." As the noted Mr. Fagin said after arousing Mr. William Sykes to the frame of mind to commit homicide, "You won't be violent, Bill—I mean not too violent for safety." The Chronicle need not have been alarmed. There is not the slightest danger of its party nominating men too good to be persons grata to the "machine."

DIED.

At Peter's Road, Lot 63, on July 10th, Preston McFadyen, aged 11 months, youngest daughter of Lauchlin McFadyen.

Three cases of smallpox have been discovered at Dawson City.

The Ottawa and Hull Fire Relief Fund now amounts to $777,925, which does not include the $101,000 voted by the Ottawa City Council, but not yet paid over to the relief committee. The largest contribution received recently was $7,481.85 from the citizens of Cape Town.

LORD SALISBURY IS RIGHT.

It is easy to understand Lord Salisbury's refusal to receive under present circumstances a deputation to discuss with him the desirability of preferential trade. The Imperial Government has indicated what its attitude is on this question. In the first place, we have Sir Wilfrid Laurier's statement in his London speech that Mr. Chamberlain is anxious to accord a preference to Canadian and other colonial products in the British market, and the further statement that such a preference would be fraught with "immense possibilities" to us. Then we have Mr. Chamberlain's suggestion to the Colonial Premier in '97 that they should make proposition, or that Britain and the colonies should join in a commission to enquire fully into the subject. Next we have Laurier's refusal to consider the suggestion, and his declaration in Great Britain that we do not want preferential trade, and that Britain would be foolish to concede it.

The Imperial Government does not need conversion; the conversion that is required is the conversion of the Canadian Government.

With a Government in Canada hostile to the project, and determined to resist it because it is too British, Lord Salisbury in discussing the question would simply waste his time. But when we have an Administration that is not afraid of a policy that is British, the situation will be altered; then we can approach the Imperial Government with confidence. In a word, Canada must declare for preference before the Home authorities will move; this is reasonable, and Lord Salisbury is right.—Mail and Empire.

THE DISSIDENT LIBERAL.

The Macgregor Herald, a Manitoba Liberal paper, having condemned some of the things the Laurier Government has done, the Hamilton Times, an Ontario paper, sneers that probably it is an understudy of the Huntingdon Gleaner or Winnipeg Tribune, which is a kind of argument that will not bring many straying sheep back into the fold. It rather will cause anxiety among the faithful by drawing attention to the fact that Liberal papers which play the independent critic's part in the political drama have under-studies, which is a proof that what they do is telling on public opinion. The situation of the Liberal Government with the independent members of its party cannot be improved by sneers, if it can be improved at all. There can be nothing more threatening to a political party than men who usually work with it, and who have supported it in opposition, begin to desert it when it is in power. That these are unusually numerous in the case of the Liberal party just now, being found in every province, and free from the suspicion of being moved by mercenary motives, is one of the greatest dangers Sir Wilfrid Laurier has to face.—Montreal Gazette.

OBITUARY.

At Chepstow, July 11th, after a long illness borne most christian-like, Mrs. Mary Campion, relict of George Campion, passed away leaving a family of two, Eliza, Mrs. Bernard Creamer, and Nellie, widow of Peter R. Fletcher, of Lawrence, Mass. Deceased was a devoted, zealous and most respected member of the Catholic church, and died strengthened by the rites of the church in which she worshipped during life. On Friday, July 13th, all that was mortal of Mr. Campion was borne to St. Mary's church, Souris, where a solemn Requiem Mass was chanted, after which she was interred in the cemetery at Souris. A funeral, largely attended by the relatives, friends and those who had the pleasure of her acquaintance, formed a fitting testimony of the esteem in which the deceased was held. THE EXAMINER extends its deepest sympathy to her family and friends. (American papers please copy)

No Gold at Nome

VICTORIA, B. C., July 26.—Dawson papers received by the steamer Amur are full of interviews with men back from Nome, who say there is little or no gold there. The country is overcrowded, and mining machinery is left on the beach, and generally chaotic conditions reign. There is much crime and an epidemic of fever is feared. The schooner Nellie Coleman has returned from Cape Nome, bringing thirty passengers, all of whom have had luck stories to tell.

Captain Dreyfus, who is still staying at the Villa Austerlitz, at Coligny near Geneva, is described by a correspondent who has just seen him as having undergone a wonderful change in his appearance since he landed in France about a twelve-month ago. He is no longer woe and thin, a veritable wreck, and the picture of melancholy. On the contrary, he has grown much stouter, has a healthy color, and seems really gay and light-hearted. All this satisfactory alteration in the unfortunate officer has been brought about since he went through the terrible ordeal of the Rennes court-martial, and the excellent accounts which are now given of him fully confirm the feeling of intense rejoicing that the intervention in his favor took place ere it was too late.

LIBERALS, BUT NOT GRITS,

Some of the Liberals who still stand on the Ottawa platform think that the men who have abandoned their platform should take a new party name. They do not like to give up the name of Liberals themselves, and they feel that it is being disgraced by the men who now lead the party.

The term New Liberals is often used, but Mr. J. S. Thomson, of Waskada, Man., thinks the old names of Liberals and Grits will serve well enough to distinguish between those who believe in the old principles and those who have abandoned them. In a letter to the Winnipeg Tribune, a Liberal paper, he says: "I suppose, sir, you know the difference between a Liberal and a Grit."

He goes on to compare those electors who allowed themselves to be worked by "Machine Grits" to "cogs in a pinion which do their work by power and know not why." A Liberal," he says, "is supposed to be a man of principle that has measures of interest at stake more than men of party."

Mrs. Thomson concluded his letter as follows: "It is the independent spirit we want to cultivate more and more until we get into the English system of measures more than party, which means a higher standard of public life. What is the use of having a creed if you do not walk up to it?"

The Montreal Star says that whatever names the two sections of the Liberal party are to be called, it is evident that they are getting farther and farther apart and there will soon be a deep gulf between them.
