

Stable Management.

Feeding is one of the most important duties in the stable. Horses require to be fed at regular hours, and in such quantities as will keep the subjects in condition to perform their daily labor. Horses at work require about two per cent. of their live weight as the daily allowance of food. From 16 to 18 lbs. of grain, and an equal weight of hay, would be considered a liberal allowance for a large horse in full work. Small, or idle horses, would not require more than one-half of that amount, as the quantity of food will depend upon the size, and the amount of work required of them. They must be fed enough to supply them the natural waste of the body, and to re-supply the substance exhausted by the labor performed.

It is not good policy to let work horses get thin. If costs more to put on flesh than it does to keep it on. Flesh that becomes hardened by exercise will be kept up with less food, under the same work, than it took to put it on. From 15 to 30 lbs. of food will about supply the daily consumption of horses, large and small.

The English cavalry horses are fed 10 quarts of oats and 12 lbs. of hay three times a day. The American cavalry horses have had the English rations increased to 13 or 14 quarts of oats and an equal amount of hay three times a day. The hunter, in the season, is allowed from 16 to 18 quarts of oats, and about 8 lbs. of hay, fed five times a day. The racehorse is allowed from 18 to 20 quarts of oats per day, and nearly as much hay as the hunter, being usually fed five times a day.

The feet and legs of horses require particular attention. It is an old saying with horsemen: "Keep the feet and legs in order, and the body will take care of itself." The legs are the first to fail. The horse, when brought in from severe, protracted exertion, should be rubbed down dry. His legs, from the knees and hocks down, should be well hand-rubbed, so that friction will create insensible perspiration; that will tend to prevent swelled legs, stiff joints, contracted tendons, and sprung knees. When the legs are fevered from overdriving, they should be bandaged with wet cloths, to take away the heat, and prevent wind-galls, that prove eye-sores, and which, without diminishing his capacity for labour, materially affect the market value of the horse.

The plan of stopping the feet twice a week in dry weather is adopted by many with horses used for fast work. The stuffing generally used consist of equal parts of clay and cow dung. Moss or tow is a cleaner stuffing, and quite superior to clay as an antidote for thrush and frog diseases. It can be packed in dry, and wetted afterwards. It will leave the feet sweet, clean, and soft, when washed out regularly with warm, salt water. Stuffing prevents the feet from becoming dry and brittle. -- National Live Stock Journal.

Department.

The acquisition of an affable deportment is an important part of education. Some think that if they have a spirit of kindness its expression is of little consequence, but "manners are a compound of spirit and form--of spirit acted into form." The first law of good manners, one that epitomizes all the rest, is "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." True courtesy consists in the observance or application of this golden rule in all social conduct, defined, "real kindness kindly expressed." True courtesy is often met in the huts and hovels of our land, and sometimes found wanting in the parlors of the rich.
