SDU Graduating Class Told Success Criteria

Comparing life to the torch not he who finished first, but rather he who reached the finishing line first with his torch still burning brightly, Rev. Elliott McGuigan, SJ, of Toronto, yesterday told the graduating class at St. Dunstan's University that "this story gives us true criteria for evaluating true success, give us a philosophy of values, and a theology for living."

Father McGuigan, a former Islander and an alumnus of SDU, addressed the 67 members of the graduating class at the Baccalaureate Services in the university chapel during Pontificial Mass, celebrated by Most Rev. M.A. MacEachern, bishop of Charlottetown and chancellor of SDU.

Father McGuigan said the substance which keeps our torches lighted is God's grace which is cherished and preserved by "a sense of vocation." Life then becomes, he said, "an apprenticeship in grace under Christ's tutelage."

FIRST QUESTION

"Our first question," he said, "is not so much what can I do for God, as rather, what does God wish to do in and with and through me."

The former rector of the Jesuit Seminary in Toronto told the graduates they should be grateful to St. Dunstan's, not only because of the excellence of the teaching and the example of holy and dedicated men and women, but also because "our Alma Mater gave us this keen, dysamic and abiding sense of vocation."

Speaking on the parable of the talents, and the courage involved and the risks faced in doubling them, Father McGuigan said, "there is no premium in the New Testament on the safe, the secure, the complacent. Never forget that Dante in the Divine Comedy reserves the first circle of the Inferno for the indecisive, weak, shifting characters."

He emphasized that the will to succeed and a certain passionate delight in the work to be done should form an integral part of our makeup. "Every truth is a highway to God," he said, "and sloth, not sex, is the great enemy."

In his closing remarks Father McGuigan told the graduates, "your world, your future, must not be a wasteland, must not end 'with a whimper and a bang,' as T. S. Eliot puts it. Judgmen Day will be your final graduation, graduation to God, 'the love that moves the sun and all the other stars.'"

Following the Baccalaureate Services, the graduates were entrtained at a buffet supper in the SDU dining room.

Commencement exercises will be held Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock in the university auditorium. The public is invited to attend.

'Mary, Mary' Pleasing But Few Superlatives

By NANCY WHITE

"Mary, Mary", as Fredericton's "Company of Ten" presented it here Saturday evening, was a generally pleasing production, but not one to raise superlatives.

Jean Kerr's hit comedy is full of funny lines strung together in repartee strongly reminiscent of Noel Coward, and these were delivered with competence to a laughing, two-thirds full house.

The play was obviously Elisabeth Orion's. Playing the title role as the witty but tactless divorcee, she shone in the five-member cast. The play lost its initial tendency to plod when she made her entrance, and she certainly supplied the sparkling vitality called for by her role.

Ron Braden was quite convincing as the husband who discovers he wants his ex-wife back. Natural in the role, he was an excellent sparring partner for Mary.

Supporting roles were handled adequately by Sharon Pollock as Tiffany, Graham Whitehead as the lawyer and Michael Ball as the movie star, but these parts could probably have been emphasized more by the director without detracting from the principles. Tiffany could have been more kooky, the lawyer older and more cynical, and the movie star more dynamic, for these characters were mainly "types" and an exaggeration of their eccentricities might have added to the performance.

The set, designed by Miss Orion, was bright, interesting, and entirely appropriate to the action taking place within it.

The program describes the play as "gay, light, fluffy", and indeed it was. The production lacked a certain polish, however, and there were moments of awareness that the actors were acting. But the show was a technically good one and provided an amusing evening of theatre.

That is to say, it was fun to watch.

Downtown Improvements Focus Of CMHA Study

Proposals to improve the area immediately surrounding Confederation Centre will be included in a McGill University professor's two-part urban planning study here for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, it was announced Saturday by Hon. John R. Nicholson, the minister responsible to Parliament for the corporation.

Professor H. Spence-Sales is expected to complete the studies during the coming summer. A federal government grant of $25,000 will finance the project.

Following the study, proposals will be made for the improvement of the area immediately surrounding the Confederation Centre. Panels and models, expected to be displayed in the Centre itself, will illustrate what the area bounded by Rochford, Dorchester, Kent and Weymouth streets might look like following such changes. Emphasis will be on such features as parking facilities, hydro-lines and streets.

The major purpose of the survey, however, is the preparation of a manual for small urban centres showing how certain features can be improved and brought into more balanced relationships with other aspects of their environments.

Mr. Nicholson said Charlottetown was chosen for the study because of its "size, pattern of development and architectural scale". The study is being made with the full approval of municipal officials here, he added.

The minister was in Charlottetown for a symposium on planning, urban renewal and housing, particularly with relation to new amendments to the National Housing Act.

British Steel Storm May Force Election

By HAROLD MORRISON

LONDON (CP)—Prime Minister Wilson may be forced into an unwanted election as the steel storm continues to swirl around his deputy, George Brown, amid public questioning whether Brown's own political future may be in jeopardy.

"Will Wilson step in to save George Brown?" headlines the Sunday Express in summing up the wrath of the Labor Party's left wing over Brown's statement that the government is prepared to "listen" to proposals for less than full government control over the bulk of Britain's steel industry.

Brown holds the position of deputy prime minister along with his economics department portfolio.

Other reports suggested that with a majority of only three seats in the 630-seat Commons, Wilson may find it increasingly difficult to avoid a general election this year, either in June or October, as he faces rising public confusion and embarrassment over his government's steel plans.

Wilson had pledged to his party's vociferous left wing that the government would settle for nothing less than 100-per-cent control over the bulk of the industry. But Brown, in a last - minute gesture, told the Commons last Thursday the government would be prepared to listen to industry proposals on how the government could achieve control with less than 100-per-cent takeover.

The anger of a group of left-wingers over what appeared to be modification of the party's policy increased with disclosure of negotiations with two party "steel rebels" for two days prior to the Commons debate in order to secure their support.

Several backbenchers, demanding another party meeting on the issue, scathingly rejected any suggestion of watering down the party's original steel nationalization plans.

And while Wilson so far has remained silent on the issue, Labor Minister Ray Gunther moved into the party fracas Sunday, urging the party's right and left wings to end their public quarrelling.

Wilson has stated in the past that he will not avoid an early election if the Tory opposition cripples the passage of government legislation. However, public opinion polls have shown indications in recent days of a swing towards the right. Normally, a governing party might seek to avoid an election showdown at a time when the country has been under enforced deflation through higher taxation and credit restrictions.

However the continuing turmoil over steel, coupled with indications that the opposition is prepared to put up a stiffening battle against the government, may force Wilson to seek a new mandate soon.
