HASZARD'S GAZETTE.

Saturday, September 22, 1855.

We have been requested to give some information as to the culture of the grape in the open air, and in the absence of interesting intelligence, we willingly devote a few lines to this subject. There may, however, be those who have doubts whether the vine will grow in the open air in the climate of P. E. Island, to these we reply, that we have seen it growing; that there was, and we believe that there is yet, one growing and bearing fruit in Cherry Valley. The writer has two vines, raised last season from seed furnished him by Mr. Simpson of Cavendish, which stood the winter without shelter or covering of any sort, except the snow, and have grown vigorously during the present summer. In the neighbouring Province of Nova Scotia, the white sweet-water grape is very commonly to be met with, perfecting its fruit in the open air, either against houses or walls, or upon trellises, forming an inclined plane. That with the same care, the same results will be produced in this Island, we have not the slightest doubt.

The vine is propagated by seed, cuttings or layers, as well as by grafting and budding or innoculation, but as these last presuppose an abundance of plants already grown, we shall confine ourselves to the three first. By seed: these must be sown in pots, and forced in a hot bed, then carefully planted out in the open air, but this is a very tedious method, as it will be some time before the plant comes to bearing, we therefore advise cuttings. These are from a foot to eighteen inches long, consisting of new or young wood, with a joint or two of that of the preceding year. They are planted so as to leave only two eyes above ground; some litter and mulch is then put about them, and they are carefully watered in dry weather; cuttings of this sort so treated, strike freely. By layers: this is effected by taking in the Spring of the year, a shoot, and cutting a notch in the stem, an inch or two below the eye, and firmly pegging it down with a hooked twig; the layer must be kept moist in very dry weather, but not too much so, as the plant will be likely to rot. Cuttings are, upon the whole, preferable, and we would advise those who have vines, to propagate them in this way.

If the vine is intended for ornament chiefly, or for shade, it may be allowed to grow freely, but if fruit is required, it must be carefully pruned. The best way to do this, is to watch the cutting, letting it produce two shoots, which are to be carefully trained, rubbing off all others while young. Miller advises cutting these two shoots down to two eyes, about Michaelmas. In the next year, the shoots that are produced from these eyes are, at the same period, to be cut down to three eyes, and the same process is to be repeated, leaving each alternate shoot to form mother wood. Miller says:—"Vines rarely produce any bearing shoots from wood that is more than a year old, therefore, great care should be taken to have such wood in every part of the trees, for the fruit is always produced upon shoots of the same year, which come out from buds of the last years wood." We are thus particular, not that it is essential, that our farmers should raise grapes, but because, if it is ascertained that the climate is propitiatory to the vine under judicious culture, it is evidence, that Prince Edward Island is as favorably off in the respect of climate, as any other part of North America between the same parallels of latitude.

Gardening is the sister art of Agriculture, but the nearer the latter approaches to the former, the more perfect it is. To have it said, "it looks more like a garden than a farm," is a species of praise that every agriculturist should look forward to. And this is one of the reasons why, we think, that the art of Horticulture should be encouraged and brought to as great perfection as possible in this Island especially.

At the family residence, on Sunday, the 9th inst., in the 53d year of her age, much lamented by her surviving friends, Mary, the beloved wife of Mr. Thomas Morris, of South Wiltshire, formerly of Bideford, Devon, England. Early in life the deceased connected herself with the Wesleyan body as a section of the Church militant, of which she remained a consistent member till summoned by death to participate in the blessings and glory of the Church triumphant. Her religion did not consist in outward form, or a mere nominal profession, but in the renewal of the heart, whereby she was enabled to reckon herself dead unto sin, but alive unto God through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.
