Miscellaneous Items. The salaries have been increased of the telegraph operators along the Maryland Division of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroads.

IN THE Months of March, April and May, the Blood should be purified, and the system strengthened, so that it be able to withstand the debilitating effects of the changing weather and resist the attack of disease.

The value of property in London has trebled since 1875. For Scalds or burns use Philodermia. The devil's money cannot buy anything that the Christian ought to have.

Morriess should use Philodermia on their infants, as its soothing and healing properties render it invaluable for chafing. Druggists sell it for 25c.

A disease has broken out among the cattle in the North-west territories which is making serious havoc on the ranches.

"How delicious is the winning Of a kiss at love's beginning."

sings the poet, and his sentiment is true with one possible exception. If either party has the catarrh, even love's kiss loses its sweetness.

The primary use of the sense of taste is evidently to guide animals in the choice of their food, and to warn them of the introduction of noxious substances into the stomach.

Dr. SARGENT'S Catarrh Remedy is a sure cure for this repulsive and distressing affliction. By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleansing and healing properties, it cures the worst cases. $500 reward offered for an incurable case.

Died in His Boots.

AN AUSTRIAN GENERAL WHO FEARED TO MEET THE REAPER IN BED.

Baron Gemmingen, lieutenant field marshal and inspector-general of the Austrian cavalry, who died at his home in Guterberg, three weeks ago, had been an active soldier for almost half a century.

When, on the afternoon of his death, his physician told him he had but an hour or two more to live, the old man sat up in bed and called to his military attendant in the next room. The soldier came. "Bring my parade uniform," commanded the general. The uniform was brought. "Now put it on me." The order was obeyed, while the old soldier gasped heavily for breath.

"Have Fritz send in a boiled chicken, a bottle of Sec, and an imported cigar." The order was filled, and the tray was laid on the general's bed. He ate a little and drank much. He lighted the cigar. He smoked it half down without taking it from his mouth. As he removed it to knock off the ashes the end came. He sank back with the cigar still between his fingers, and died before it went out.

The Khedive, oddly enough for an Oriental, did not smoke, with the result that the palace cigarettes— invariably handed round with coffee—were notoriously the worst in Cairo, and except in the case of absolute strangers it was ludicrous to see how tobacco was avoided in his presence. He always carried a cigarette case, however, and delighted in offering it and little presents of money to the English sentries placed on guard round his palace when first Cairo was occupied by British troops. He loved to tell stories of his experiences with these guards.

An early riser, he was in the habit of either beginning his reading of official reports or walking in his garden in the cool sunrise hour. One morning, returning to the palace from a walk in the garden of Ghizich, he was stopped by a sentry. "You can't go in here, your highness," said the man of war, with the Briton's amiable contempt for the fat little "furriner."

"But I belong to the palace," faltered the Khedive, delighted. "Oh, do you? A good good place!" "Very good," said Tewfik, diffidently. "Ah, you look like it. Bustan' times, I suppose. Nothing to do and plenty to eat. I would-it mind serving your master. Would he stand six shillings a day? What sort of a feller is he?"

And then, alas, the sergeant coming round recognized and saluted the Khedive to the vast discomfort of Thomas Atkins and to the chagrin of his highness, who would fain have heard more about himself, and who probably had never received a more sincere offer of service.—Blackwood's Magazine.
