Express Appreciation

'We, the Boxholders of Morell Rear and vicinity, wish to express our appreciation for the very favourable services rendered by our former mail courier, Mr. P. R. Sinnott.

Pat, as he is known to us all, has travelled our roads in wind, hail and rain for over twenty-four years.

When we consider these long years of service there must have been a great deal of initiative and backbone in the mail courier, not only to have good driving horses in preparation all the time, but also to have his wagon and sleigh ready for the cobblestone roads.

During these years he has witnessed many happy events. The infants of his maiden trips were the men of his retirement.

To you, Pat, who has fulfilled your duty under heavy loads, we ask you to accept this token of our appreciation for the many years of service and wish you every success in your retirement.

Third day we did the remaining 26 miles into Telegraph Creek. The distance had been negotiated the previous summer by a young German-born prospector named Blitz, in 24 hours elapsed time including a two hour rest.

We weighed about 135 lbs - the ideal weight for long hard "musher" (wee, wee) made good his name (Blitz or Blitzen) which means lightning in German. "Mushers" in that country used deerskin moccasins. It takes about a week to get used to them, but one can walk farther and be less tired at the end of a journey than if boots or heavy footwear were used.

During our trip about two weeks, the shots which echoed around the world were fired at Sarajava, assassinating the Archduke Ferdinand and of Austria, starting the first of the line over mountains and rivers from Ashcroft in southern British Columbia to Dawson City, and about 400 miles farther overland to Fairbanks, Alaska. The operator posted a news bulletin every evening - a gesture of social amenity to the fifty or sixty inhabitants of the village.

In order to give anything approaching an adequate description of the stupendous mass that is the Rocky Mountains, one would require the descriptive gifts Irving Couper had with the poetic sentiment of Lord Byron. The littlest of man made institutions and even the panoramic spread of great cities pale into insignificance when compared with the vast mass of mountains, streams, and glaciers.

One is reminded of the answer of the old Sioux Indian chief Geronimo, who was the most warlike of the plains Indians who surrounded General Custer and his army in the 1870's and hacked the General and his army to pieces - to the last man.

The Pipe of Peace had been smoked by the Indians had been smoked fairly and given "reservations" by the U.S. government and Geronimo was still "big chief". He was being taken to New York City by some Western tycoon on a sight-seeing tour. When he saw great bridges and skyscrapers, he stood pat - stoic like - never showed the least surprise. His cicerone, rather irked by the old chief's sang froid, said "terrible big, isn't it?" The chief's equanimity was not in the least disturbed - he retorted "Ugh! not big like Rocky Mountains!"

It must have taken desperate courage and gambling spirit on the part of the British, American and Canadian financiers, also the engineers and the great Empire builder, Sir John A. Macdonald, who promulgated and brought to a successful finish the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1885 when the last spike (Smith) was driven by Donald Smith (Lord Strathcona). At that time (1906) there was considerable circuitous routing and "switch-backs" in order to get over heavy grades. In one place called "the loops", the train almost paralleled the track that it had gone over perhaps a half hour before - with the difference that it was nearly a hundred feet farther up the grade.

The "loops" have been discarded since and a tunnel was driven through the mountain. More tunnels were constructed later. In many places the rails and trains had an eerie perch on the precipitous slopes of mountains. A road bed was blasted out of the solid osatic rock. Strange to relate, the road bed in the mountains was much firmer and smoother than on the prairies - at that time. Also the speed appeared just as fast as that made on the prairies.

In places liable to snow and rock slides, long slant roofed wooden sheds were built, which carried avalanches over the tops of trains into the dark recesses of canyons hundreds of feet below. The forests covering the lower lying mountains as the Pacific coast was approached, reminded one of an enormous spread of green velvet covering the landscape. Farther back, toward the Great Divide, the "timber line" extends to what appears to be about half way to the peak. The rest of the distance is "bald" rock, snow and glacier. There are several swanky hotels and resorts in the mountains from which the idle rich can disport themselves at skiing, mountain climbing, shooting mountain sheep, tobogganing etc., but their bleak inhospitable exterior offer little inducement to the great body of the world's producers who prefer the hum of industry and the "crowded marts of men."

Those who would hope to "live off the land" would have short shift in the mountains. Those to whom one hundred dollars a day for hotel fare and mountain outfits is mere chicken feed, may go into the seventh heaven of ecstasy in describing the grand physical features and scenery, but for the great hot pool, one good look is sufficient.

In this wondrous age in which we are privileged to live, people do not necessarily have to travel to see the world. They can do so quite readily through the agencies of the great inventions - the cinema and television. It is possible for one to view motion pictures of famous buildings and happenings in the world of today with just as good satisfaction as if he made a special trip to the spot.
