Canadians Within Sight Of Biblical Mount Sinai

By JACK BRAYLEY
Caadian Press Staff Writer

EL TOR, Egypt (CP)—Liying under lacy palms on the warm sand and with long rollers sweeping in from the Red Sea, Cpl. Reg Salmon of Saskatoon said he'd rade his cosy spot any day for the cold and snow of home.

"Sure, I wrote them boasting about the climate and about this bring the sort of place millionaires go in the wintertime," shrugged the signaller, turning so that the sun continued its even coat of tan on his naked back. "But the snow and cold would really look good just about now."

The temperature here—75 daytime—is quite a change for Reg. When he left Whitehorse in the Yukon a few weeks ago, the thermometer registered a bone-chilling 53 below.

LUSH SPOT

Actually, this extreme southern United Nations Emergency Force post on the Sinai Peninsula, where the gulfs of Aqaba and Suez meet the Red Sea, is considered a lush spot by the half dozen Canadian signallers attached to an advance Indian company, facing withdrawing Israeli forces.

It is within sight of biblical Mount Sinai, where Moses received the Ten Commandments. The mountain is part of a spectacular, bare and jagged range shot with reds, pinks, browns and greys and rising almost perpendicularly from the desert that leads to the bright green sea.

Unlike most other posts, this one, though terribly isolated is relatively unscathed by the recent ivading armies. The Canadians and their UNEF comrades, have been able to make themselves fairly comfortable. Supply was an early problem because of the 200 miles of rough highway and camel tracks between this point and the UNEF base at Abu Suweir.

"Rather than ride back in the back of one of our vehicles over those rough roads, I'll walk," said Sigmn. Harvey Brown of Calgary. "I can show you the bruises."

AIR RELIEF

But the isolation is being overcome by the composite RCAF squadron, which is introducing scheduled Dakota runs with mail, supplies and relief personnel. The twin-engined Daks can use the long landing strips at El Tor, Abu Suweir and El 'Arish.

Says Sgt. Jack Hanlon of Kingston, Ont.: "We'll soon be switching from Spam to a regular diet, which is a good thing because we've just about run out of recipes on how to cook the Spam."

Flt. Lt. Bill Collin of Fort William made a happy discovery on his inaugural flight. He found he could travel by jeep to a nearby warm spring, have a swim and bath and still get his lunch before departure time on the return flight to Abu Suweir. The Canadian sigallejs often by-pass the warm springs, preferring to dip in the moderate waters of the Red Sea in front of their signal truck.

At the time they were visited by a Canadian Press reporter, they were short a battery and were using their vehicle power to make the switch each time for a run a signal motor. "Rather than ride to the springs we just dip in the sea," said Cpl. Jacques Letourneau of Grand'mere, Que.

FELINE FRIENDS

Sigmn. Jack Harrison of Grand View, Man., conducts visitors on guided tours through the labyrinth of mud huts of the abandoned native quarter, where he has befriended some cats "who don't know any Canadian but who sure come when I bring them food."

Sigmn. Ernest MacKenzie says it isn't like his home at Canso N.S. "but I like it here and we're having a really interesting time."

The Canadian signallers, and particularly Harvey Brown, have again confirmed that it's a pretty small world. One of the small Norwegian medical detachment here is Pte. Nybo Helge, whose sister — Mrs. Berit Agasosten—lives a few blocks away from Brown in Calgary.

Among those who regularly visit this extedning UNEF outposts and make their services available to all troops are Rev. Louis Schmidt of Duck Lake Sask., and Rev. Ormond (Hoppy) Hopkins of Perth, Ont., respectively Roman Catholic and Anglican chaplains to the Canadian Middle East Force.

196,000 Flee From Hungary

BUDAPEST (AP — Foreign ministry officials acknowledged Saturday that about 196,000 refugees have left Hungary. The total included 180,000 fleeing to Austria and 16,000 to Yugoslavia.

Ferenc Esztergalyos, who heads the repatriation mission to Austria, and Miklos Barity, head of a similar mission to Yugoslavia, told a press conference some 16,000 refugees had returned from Austria.

Reveals Nazi Efforts To Develop Flying Saucers

MUNICH Reuters — Nazi Germany developed flying saucers that flew more than 1,000 miles an hour and a bomber that could attack the United States and return without refuelling, it was disclosed Sunday.

These and other details of Hitler's efforts to achieve a "wonder weapon" that would turn the tide of the war in its closing hours are revealed in a book called The German Weapons and Secret Weapons of the World War II and their evelopment, by Rudolf Lusar, who during the war was head of the technical arms department of the German war ministry.

The flying saucers, designed by three German engineers and an Italian, were 138 feet in diameter. The first one flew Feb. 14, 1945, at Prague, and reached a height of more than 40,000 feet and a speed of 1,250 miles an hour.

Germany, the book says, was also building the Heinkel 343, a bomber capable of reaching the United States and returning without refuelling. Several of the planes were ready at the end of the war. The book also said it was originally planned to stage the first air raid on the United States in May, 1945.

The Germans also were busy at work on the super V-9 rocket, an outgrowth of the V-1 and V-2 rockets which Germany aimed at England after the allied landings in France in 1944.

Had they been completed, the book said, the V-9s would have been able to carry a one-ton warhead acorss the Atlantic to the U.S. in 35 minutes. The rocket was actually to have been guided by a pilot, who would jump out at the last moment with a parachute, to be rescued, if possible, by a German submarine at sea.

Opening lead—queen of spades.

I a great many contracts that are played in a suit, the best policy for the defenders is to try to run declarer out of trumps so that any good cards they may have in side cuits can be cashed.

It behooves the declarer, therefore, to try to counteract any such means as happens to be available. design by the defense with such

An example of the battle for trump control is furnished in today's hand. Suppose a spade lead and continuation which declarer ruffs. What should he do next?

If South draws trumps at this point he will have to take four rounds, thereby exhausting himself of trumps. He may then cash his four diamond tricks, but when he finally gets around to clubs the ace will immediately be taken togeiher with the remaining spades for a one trick set.

If the trumps were divided 3-3, South would make the hand by forcing out the ace of clubs after three rounds of trump. But the 4-2 trump break which actually exists should not prove at all surprising, since it occurs far more often than the 3-3 division.

Declarer must play on the basis that hearts will split 4-2 and take measures accordingly. After trumping the spade his best play is to lead a low club towards dummy's jack and, if the jack wins the trick then draw the trumps and cash the diamonds. This will give him ten tricks.

It may be, though, that West will be shrewd enough to keep up with the ace of clubs, when the low club is led, and lead another spade.

If this happens, the declarer must be careful not to trump the spade because if he does he will then have less trumps than West and will again go down. Instead, he should discard a winner in order to maintain adequate trump control.

Against this maneuver West will be helpless. A spade continuation can be ruffed in dummy, without shortening declarer's trumps. Any other lead will also give South the rest of the tricks.

BEDTIME STORIES

Young Bucky Feels Better

It seems to help can we but share,
The troubles we find hard to bear.
—Lightfoot.

Lightfoot the Deer was no longer wearing his wonderful crown of antlers, which most people call horns. Lightfoot loses his crown every winter. It becomes loose and falls off. This makes a great difference in Lightfoot's looks. He no longer holds his head high and proudly. He no longer looks as if he thought himself king of the Green Forest. He seems to want to keep out of sight as much as possible.

"What are you doing?" he asked.

When Young Bucky, one of the Lightfoot twins, first saw his father without his crown it was quite upsetting. He just didn't know what to make of it. But presently he began to feel better. You see, his own small horns had dropped off and that had been a dreadful blow to his pride. Being young, he had not known that this was going to happen and somehow he had felt ashamed to be seen without those horns he had been so proud of. He had wanted to go off by himself and keep out of sight. Now, when he saw his father no better off than he was, it gave him a very good feeling. He felt that they had something in common.

"You have nothing to be ashamed of," declared Lightfoot. "It happens every winter, that all members of the Deer family who have horns lose them. And it's a good thing."

"Why is it a good thing?" asked the Young Buck.

"Because then we can have new and bigger ones," replied Lightfoot.

"Couldn't I have bigger ones anyway?" asked Young Bucky.

Lightfoot shook his head. "No," said he. "If those first horns of yours never dropped off they would never get any bigger. They would always be just as they were. Perhaps you remember that they were not hard and sharp last spring and in the summer. Then they were growing. It was when they stopped growing that they became hard. After that they could never grown again," explained Lightfoot.

Young Bucky thought this over. The more he thought about it, the better he felt. "You are sure I'll have new ones by and by?" he ventured.

Lightfoot nodded. "'Just as surely as you haven't any now you will have a new set that will be bigger and better," said he.

Young Bucky looked over at his twin sister. "Will she have horns?" he asked.

This time Lightfoot shook his head. "No," said he. "She'll never have horns. You know your mother hasn't any horns."

Now the young deer had never thought about that before. Somehow the thought that his sister never would have horns, but he would, made him feel still better.

A few days later he happened to come to the place where one of Lightfoot's antlers had dropped off. Prickly Perky the Porcupine was beside it. He seemed to be gnawing at it with his big teeth. He looked as if he was eating it; but how could anyone eat anything as hard as that? "What are you doing?" he asked.

"Can't you see what I'm doing?" muttered Prickly Porky, and went right on gnawing at that antler.
