

Religion and Life

By Very Rev. George C. Pidgeon, D.D., L.L.D. First Moderator of the United Church of Canada (Copyright)

SOME years ago the American YMCA appointed a committee to deal with certain issues which had arisen in its religious work. The chairman opened the conference with a study of Moffatt's translation of II Corinthians 4, verses 1 and 16: "I never lose heart. The vessels are suggestive. "As I hold this ministry by God's mercy to me. I never lose heart in it."

It was no sentimental youth who penned these words. There was so gliding over the surface of things, and feeling that if you can laugh at them you are really happy. These words were from the heart of a man who had plumbed the depths of human experience, and who had known personally every joy and sorrow that the exertion of unparalleled power in the teeth of malignant opposition can bring.

One day, at the Forks of the Credit which was a majestic tree. Great branches turned heavenward with a sweep, and a life which defied the elements provided a shelter which inspired while it shaded us from the sun. On examining it we found that the secret of its greatness was that the top had been broken off when it was only a few feet above the ground, and then its energies had turned into the branches below.

It is said that during the dark days of the first world war, the only bright spot in British Government circles was David Lloyd George's office. Defeats on many fields had blasted their hopes, but the Prime Minister was always certain that ultimate victory was sure. Those closest to him said that his religious faith was the ground of his confidence; the cause of freedom was God's cause and God was responsible for the outcome of the struggle.

By which the stars shine in the heavens at night; But I may know, as well as any man, That stars are shining, and may share their light. I may not know how blows the summer wind, And 'Whence' and 'Whither?' still unanswered be; But I may feel its healing breath and find Rest and refreshment in the breeze for me.

IN MEMORIAM

MR. WALTER MACINTOSH

By the death of Walter MacIntosh, Sr. at his home Mount Pleasant on Friday afternoon Sept. 1, following a trying illness of almost a year, the community lost one of its oldest landmarks connecting the present with the past. Born at Mount Pleasant August 11, 1870, a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William MacIntosh, he lived his entire life on the farm on which he was born, and was the last surviving member of that family.

The funeral was held Sept. 4 to Victoria West Presbyterian Church and was largely attended. Owing to the absence of his pastor, Rev. John Sheen of Elmisdale United Church, a close friend of the family officiated. He was assisted by Rev. William Ouborne who closed his address by repeating "Crossing the Bar". Hymns sung during the service were: "The Lord Is My Shepherd", "Rock of Ages", "Bate in the Arms of Jesus", and "Abide With Me", a solo "There is no Night There" was very feelingly rendered by Mr. Roy Phillips.

He leaves to mourn three daughters and three sons: Mrs. Ross Spencer, Kingston, Ontario, Kathleen and Margaret at home, Calvin, Ottawa, Fraser, Toronto, and Walter at home. The pallbearers were Ancel and Clayton Ballum, Howard and Elmer Robison and John and Earle MacDonald who tenderly laid his remains to rest beside his wife, the former Edith Ballum of Victoria West, who predeceased him four years ago.

The many beautiful floral tributes bore silent testimony to the esteem in which the deceased was held.

TOP-QUALITY FISH Fish caught in Canadian fishing grounds are generally of high quality because of the purity and coolness of the waters.

In The World of Books With Will B. Bird

SIMPLE SPEAKS HIS MIND by Langston Hughes, Mussion Book Co.; $3.00. This book really began as a weekly column in "The Chicago Defender." The author states: "The character whose nickname is Simple started talking to me one day about the war, Hitler, the draft, Shakespeare, and getting up earlier than necessary in the morning, so I put down on paper exactly what he said. Since then he has made some one hundred and fifty appearances in print, and has even received fan letters addressed to himself rather than to the author. I met a fellow in a bank who worked in a war plant. I asked him what he was making. He said "Cranks." "What kind of cranks?" I asked. "Cranks Just cranks!" "What do they crank?" I asked. He said: "I don't know. I don't crank with them cranks. I just make 'em. They don't tell colored folks what cranks crank." The author claims that much of the material in the book is derived from actual conversations overheard in Harlem. It is a different book on the racial problem. It was written for Negro readers and none other, and is far more revealing than the average book has been.

Three hundred guests raised their glasses at a birthday in the U. K. to toast the guest of honour - a bull who was 12 years old. This was no ordinary bull for the party was being held at the home of Captain R. de Q. Quincey, Robert, one of the most perfect specimens of Hereford cattle ever bred in the United Kingdom. Robert's sons alone have been sold for more than $300,000. Many had gone to South America, where they had won national championship and sired national champions. His stock had also won championships in Australia.

The sire of champions - one of his sons, Vern Boxer, was supreme champion at the Royal Show in July, has never been on a show ground.

Siilage Made In The Bale Experiments have just been carried out successfully on Houndhill Farm, Worsborough, Bridge, Barnsley, England in making silage by baling. Nine acres of grass, mowed, baled, and built in a pit silo last May have just been examined and so far found to be good. The grass shows no trace of mold, and has all the signs of adequate fermentation.

Two tractors with pick-up baler and leader were used. The pick-up baler carried a special set of gears which would tie a bale 18" to 20" long on an 18" by 14" base, as against the usual 30" hay bale. This was necessary because of the extra weight of green crop. The silage was to produce an easily handled bale of about 30 lb. per cu. ft. density.

The bales were then collected by truck and built closely together in a pit, 9' wide by 21' long, out on sloping ground. The back end of the pit was approximately 5' deep, and the front opened on the surface of the ground. No particular method was followed in building the bales, except from keeping them as close together as possible. Molasses was added from watering - can to each layer of bales, but a sprinkler on the baler will be fitted for the next experiment.

From the experiment it is obvious that silage can be made by baling. The manufacture of silage of predictable composition by the setting of a machine now is a practicable possibility, and the Agricultural Notes From Britain Mobile Chopper For Combine Straw To aid the job of ploughing-in straw and speed up the rotting down process, a new mobile chopper has been developed in Britain known as the "Strobust". It consists of a Robust cutter and conveyor mounted on semi-pneumatic and suitable for attachment by hitch-point to the rear of any combine. The outfit carries its own engine - a 10 h. p. twin-cylinder; Peter air-cooled gasoline-driver model - and can be used as a static unit for chopping straw, silage, etc. As straw drops from the combine it is automatically fed by chain-driven conveyor to the feed-in of the Robust cutter and shredded and chopped and delivered to the rear to be spread over a wide engine is around £250 ($770), and it's made by Mitchell, Colman & Co. Ltd., 27 Creechurch Lane, London, E. C. 3.
