The Transvaal War

From trustworthy information it is learned that the Boers had about 2,000 men killed in action. Their total losses from all causes must at a most modest estimate exceed 15,000 not including several thousand Free Staters who have returned to their farms.

The Queen has telegraphed Lord Roberts to convey her sympathy to the widow of General Joubert, coupled with the statement that Britons regarded her husband as a gallant soldier and an honorable foeman. This reflects the general sentiment of the Empire and is calculated to allay the bitter feelings which the war has engendered. It does credit also to Her Majesty's thoughtfulness and kindness.

The appointment of a commission to arrange for the payment of indemnities to the loyal Dutch who have suffered property losses through the war, is becoming daily more urgent. Many of the Dutch who have maintained their allegiance to Great Britain throughout the trouble have lost everything they possessed, and are now suffering privations. The cases of those who have resisted strong pressure to throw in their lot with the Boers are especially hard.

When the war broke out a Canadian boy, William Cox, a native of Maugerville, New Brunswick, was building a railway in the Transvaal. When hostilities began he went to Natal and joined the South African Light Horse. He was at Potgieter's Drift when the crossing was effected. There was a ferry boat on the Boer side of the river, and Cox with seven others of his squadron swam over to bring the boat back. The Boers opened fire on them, but they went on and brought away the boat, some of them swimming with one hand on the tow rope and the other down in the water pushing as best they could. After a few moments of slow progress the rope caught on the boat in a way that made the craft unmanageable, whereupon Cox clambered to the deck and in the face of a hail of bullets cleared the rope and enabled his comrades to handle the boat. The gallant fellow was lucky enough to escape without a scratch.

Speaking at a breakfast of the liberal agents at Nottingham, Herbert Gladstone, son of the late statesman, declared that nearly all the liberals had agreed in regard to the settlement of the South African question that it was the duty of the government to make a recurrence of the war impossible and to show the world that British power in South Africa was predominant and that the British flag must wave over the whole of South Africa.

The Paris press is unanimous in eulogizing General Joubert, whose death is considered a serious loss to the federals. All the papers agree in thinking that a change in the command is bound to have grave consequences for the Boer operations. Many think, however, that President Kruger is fully equal to the task, and that considering his military reputation, the resistance of the Boers is likely to become more stubborn than ever.
