

THE DAILY EXAMINER.

AUGUST 18, 1891.

Notes and Comments.

All the tourists this year are delighted with P. E. Island.

We note that application has been made for letters patent to incorporate the McKay Woollen Company.

Upon the list of the "Governing Body" of the Imperial Institute is the name of "Mr. Donald Farquharson, Prince Edward Island."

Efforts are now being made by influential persons in China and Japan with a view to the conclusion of a Treaty which should bring about a closer union for the future between the two countries.

Henry Clewes of New York reports that the wheat crop of the States now promises to surpass both in quantity and quality the earlier estimates.

We accept the statement of the Guardian that the man from Tracadie was not drunk when he called at the Guardian office.

The Imperial Institute of the United Kingdom, the Colonies and India was designed as the permanent national memorial of the Jubilee of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

Bishop Courtney's Story

OF STRANGE TELEPATHIC SYMPATHY OF A DYING PERSON.

The writer of the following account is well known to me, and permits the publication of her letter, excepting only the names. She had previously related to me much of her story, in the presence of her husband:

"On the night of the 13th March, 1879, I was going to a dinner party at Admiral —'s. While dressing for the same through the door of my room, which led into my husband's dressing room, I distinctly saw a white hand wave to and fro twice. I went into the room, and found no one was there or had been there, as the door on the other side was closed; and on inquiring I found no one had been upstairs.

"While dressing nothing further occurred, but on arriving at Admiral —'s a strange feeling came over me. I could eat no dinner, nor afterwards, when we had some music, could I sing well. All the time I felt that someone, or something, was near me.

"We went home, and about eleven o'clock or half-past, I commenced undressing. I distinctly felt someone touching my hair, as if they, or he, were undoing it. "I was very frightened, and told my husband I was so. He laughed at me. When saying my prayers, on praying as I always did for the recovery of a sick friend, instead of as usual asking God to make him well, all I could say was "Oh, God, put him out of his misery.

"I got into bed, and a voice, the voice of my friend, distinctly said, "Good bye, Sis" (which he used to call me.) "Whether I fell asleep then or not I don't know, but I distinctly felt a kiss on my cheek, and I saw my friend, who told me he had left me some money, but that he wanted it to be left differently, but had had no time to alter it. A vivid line was across his face. I woke crying.

"About, I think, five days after, a letter was brought to me with a deep black border. I felt what it meant. It was to tell me of the death of my friend —, who had passed away at half-past ten p. m., March 13. The letter proceeded to tell me he had left me some money, but that the writer (his brother) was too ill and upset to give me any further particulars, or tell me of any messages he had sent me, only that his brother had died murmuring my name.

It appears, continues the Bishop, that it was the dying man's wish to alter his will, and leave the money to one of her children, his godson rather than to herself, "as he thought people might misconstrue his motives," and she adds, his brother ended his letter by saying "if ever woman was loved on earth, my unhappy brother loved you, and if ever meet it can never be as strangers, but as brother and sister." Further on the writes, "I did not know this, but suspected it before his death."

Here there was mutual affection—on one side of unusual strength. Each, moreover, habitually thought of the other, the dying man more continuously and intently of the two, until at length the object of his devotion seemed to hear his voice, and, even reading his thoughts, became aware of his special wish concerning her and her child.—Bishop Courtney, in Blackwood's Magazine.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

To the Editor of the Guardian.

DEAR SIR,—After courteously inserting, in your issue of 11th August, my letter of the 6th inst., you reply by giving what you assert to be "W. C. D.'s" words, "exactly as they appeared in THE EXAMINER."

Will you kindly allow me to repeat, distinctly and emphatically, my statement "that neither THE EXAMINER nor any other paper published a letter from W. C. D., containing such an assurance," etc.; and to add that neither THE EXAMINER nor any other paper, anywhere or at any time, published a letter from W. C. D. containing the paragraph you have quoted, or any language to similar effect, and I challenge you to the proof. Your mere assertion is not sufficient evidence, and the letter you quote from was never signed by Yours truly, W. C. D.
