BODIES RECOVERED

After arrival of the police, Chester Fire Department and a doctor, the pit was pumped out. Jim Keizer of Gold River was lowered into the pit and recovered the bodies.

The sequence of events was obscure but the consensus was that the elder Restall went down into the pit first, collapsed, and his son went to his rescue. He too was overcome and Graeser and Hiltz also succumbed.

Gordon Hiltz, a brother of the dead man, and Leonard Keizer, a brother of James Keizer, had gone part way down the ladder into the hole when they began to feel dizzy. They returned to the surface.

The bodies were taken ashore about 7 p.m. ADT, three hours after the deaths.

CAME IN 1959

Restall first came here with his eldest son in 1959. His wife and younger son came the following year. They were all confident that somewhere beneath the surface of the one-half-square-mile island was $300,000 in gold bars.

The island and its legend fascinated Restall since he was a school boy. He had spent almost $200,000 on the search, much of it his own, but considerable money from others. He talked into backing him.

And the money he spent was only a trickle compared with that spent before his turn. Estimates have been in the millions of dollars from the past searchers, including former U.S. President Franklin D. Roosevelt. It was far more, most people thought, than would ever be found if there was a treasure to find.

Recently Restall believed he

Who Loves Wayne And Shuster? '65 Show Proves Everyone Does

By MARIAN BRUCE

Who doesn't love Wayne and Shuster?

If there was such a sombre soul in the crowd which packed Confederation Centre theatre last night for the premiere of "Wayne and Shuster in Charlottetown," his presence was quite unobtrusive.

Most people came expecting top entertainment. Judging from audience response, which included a thundering standing ovation, few, if any, were disappointed.

All the better adjectives describe the show—happy, gay, colorful, smooth and fast-paced.

Oh, yes. And it's funny. It has almost three hours of comedy, which ranges from the subtle pun to broad slapstick.

Many of the "Spring Thaw" favorites are on hand to brighten the show, which is, in fact, quite a bit like "Thaw" but with the inimitable addition of Canada's beloved comedy team.

There's a local girl in the show. Charlottetown's Marsha Wellner appears twice on stage in Highland costume to pipe the comedy team off stage with the dignity, Shuster says, which is appropriate for an appearance in Prince Edward Island.

body write a song about "Ecum-Secum"?

There has been one written about one community—Charlottetown. It was sung quite effectively by Johnny Wayne, who wrote the music and lyrics, and received one of the biggest hands of the night, as he appeared in one of his few serious roles.

MANY HIGHLIGHTS BACK

In addition to the Charlotte-town song, many of the other highlights of last year's show are back. "The Match," "Corn Flakes," "The Centennial Concerto."

The latter skit is probably one of the show's funniest, especially to so far as local audiences are concerned. It brings back the familiar Wayne-Shuster, this time in a scheme to tear down Confederation Centre to make way for a Euston to Richmond Street subway.

Oak Island Called Fort Knox For 18th-Century Privateers

CHESTER, N.S. (CP) — The men trapped Tuesday in one of 200 shafts which have been sunk in tiny Oak Island during 168 years of digging were working for a man who believed the half-square-mile dot once was the Fort Knox of 18th-century privateers.

Robert Restall, unlike many earlier treasure seekers, discarded the idea that the island in Mahone Bay was a chance burial ground for a single pirate's gold. Many have said the island was chosen by English pirate Captain Kidd as a cache for his loot.

Restall figured privateers, probably employing slave labor, built the "money pit" and its connecting network of intake tunnels and used the island for 20 years.

The pit drops for probably 150 feet into blue clay and sand tiered at intervals with oak planks believed cut on the island. The tide rushing in through the tunnels floods the whole cavern to about 30 feet from the surface, and engineers say such a sophisticated mechanical took considerable engineering knowledge and several years to build.

REDISCOVERED TUNNELS

One of Restall's most important finds came when he rediscovered the intake tunnels and was able to pump in concrete to partially curtail the flooding that had been going on for probably 250 years.

He said in an interview such an elaborate system of underground tunnels and pits, flooded by seawater, was used for the safekeeping of treasure from Panama and the West Indies during the 17th and 18th centuries.

The shafts drop nearly 100 feet below tide level and Restall employed gasoline- and diesel-powered pumps of 1,000-gallons-a-minute capacity to bail them.

He believed drills which picked up traces of gold during treasure-hunting operations in 1897 actually were deflected from the main shaft and that the treasure lies to one side.

Doubters have said that more money has been sunk into recovery operations than the island ever will yield. Four years after he began assembling his recovery machinery in 1959, Restall had invested about $70,000.

Over the years, individuals, syndicates and companies set up especially for the search have covered the island with drill holes. Expeditions included those of Texas and New Jersey millionaires, engineers, professors, contractors, manufacturers, hard-rock miners, groups of Nova Scotia businessmen and the late Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Restall rejected earlier estimates of $200,000,000 in treasure. He figured the island contained about $300,000,000, most of it in gold bars. At one time, he thought he was within 25 feet of this gold.

20 Ayrshires Sell Briskly

An even 20 Ayrshire heifers sold briskly last night at a sale sponsored by the Prince Edward Island Ayrshire Breeders Club.

Two heifers from the internationally known Meredith Farm at Topsfield, Mass., sold for $345 and $375 respectively. Agriculture Minister Andrew MacRae bought the first one. The other one was purchased by Arthur MacRae for A. MacRae and Sons' herd.

The first heifer of the sale was sold to a Newfoundland man for $320. She was Blackadder Dewdrop and was consigned by George Boswell of Frenchfort.
