VEGETARIAN LUNCHEONS.

They Are Desirable from the Brain-Worker's Point of View.

If a woman is by any chance a farmer and has an afternoon's ploughing ahead of her, she can afford to eat as substantial a lunch as she chooses. If she is a society woman and intends to pass the afternoon in open air exercise she may enjoy the same proud privilege. But if she is an ordinary woman, with an afternoon of sedentary work, either mental or manual, let her beware of heavy lunches.

It is even more unwise and unhygienic for the brain-worker to eat a midday meal of many courses than for the hand-worker. It is positively criminal for a woman who needs to be alert and vigorous intellectually to divert the blood from the brain, where it is most needed, to the stomach, by giving the stomach a severe task to perform. The brain-worker's meals, until after her daily "stint" is over, should be of the lightest sort compatible with nourishment. Her breakfast may be a fairly substantial one, for she can generally get a few minutes' of open air exercise after it, but her luncheon must be positively birdlike. Then her dinner may be as heavy as she pleases to have it.

This does not mean that a delicate repast of tea and eclairs or a saucer of ice-cream with macaroons is recommended. On the reverse, because she must eat but little and light food at noon, the brainworker should be sure to have that nourishing. A cup of beef-tea, masquerading as bonillon, will both satisfy her appetite and strengthen her. Fruit is always good for persons who are forced to be indoors, for it is not only satisfactory but medicinal in its properties, and will make up for the enforced lack of air and exercise. Apples, dates, figs, oranges, grape fruit, grapes, pears or strawberries make a lunch quite heavy enough for the woman who probably will not stir from her room for five hours. A cup of cocoa and a cracker will keep one from feeling faint, and at the same time will not produce the awful drowsiness with which the woman must combat who eats large luncheons without following them by exercise.

Of course, if any one has been accustomed to eating meat, potatoes, salad and dessert at noon, she cannot at one leap attain the condition where a cup of clam broth or a handful of dates will satisfy her noonday appetite. But she can gradually approach that state, and when she reaches it she will find herself a much more vigorous person mentally, and a much less dyspeptic one physically than she was under the old regimen.—New York World.

Deep Sea Soundings.

A ship regularly engaged in deep sea sounding has the sounding machine mounted at the after-end, and when about to sound is brought to a standstill, with the stern to the sea. The stray line, with the sounding rod and sinker attached, is over the guide pulley and carefully lowered to the water's edge, the register is set to zero, and the deep sea thermometer is clamped to the sounding line; a seaman is stationed at the friction line, which controls the velocity with which the wire is unreeled, another at the brake, and a third on the grating outside to handle the sinker and instruments, and to guide the wire as it passes overboard; a machinist is at the hoisting engine, and the recorder takes a position for reading the register. When the sinker is let go the vessel is maneuvered so as to keep the wire vertical, and the friction line is adjusted so as to allow it to descend from seventy to one hundred fathoms per minute.

The instant the sinker strikes the bottom, which is unmistakably indicated by the sudden release of the wire from strain, the reel is stopped by the friction line and brake; the recorder notes the number of turns of the reel. In an hour this messenger of man's ingenuity makes its excursion through five miles of watery waste to the abysmal regions of perfect repose, and brings to the light of day the soil with which the rain of shells of minute infusorial organism from the upper waters has been for ages mantling the ocean's floor. Here and there a giant peak rising from these sunless depths lifts his head to see the sky, and the dredge and trawl tell us that along his rugged sides, and on the hills and plains below, and even in the inky blackness and the freezing cold of the deepest valleys, there is life.—Popular Science Monthly.

Women Crossing the Street.

Did you ever watch women cross the street? There is the sweet young thing who picks her way even though the stones be swept white and clean. She always possesses small feet and wears pretty shoes and smart gowns and has an appalling look in her eye when she starts over. The policemen always help her, though they know she needs no help and she knows they know it. But that makes no difference at all. The men always stop on the curbing to see if she reaches her destination all right.

Then there is the business young woman, who plunges into the fray in awful absent-mindedness. Sometimes she picks up her dress skirt, but she usually forgets all about it, and her shoes are not new, anyhow. The policemen know they ought to help her, and she gives them fearful shocks, because they know she is doomed to be run down some day and they only hope it will be on the next fellow's crossing. It all comes of her having her mind occupied. A woman with an occupied mind is bound to upset things.

And finally there is the poor little timid woman, who is deathly afraid of truck horses and is shabbily dressed and liable to heart disease. She gets across anyhow, no one knows just how, because the first two varieties take up all the attention.—Philadelphia Times.

Remarkable Driving.

It is generally the easiest thing in the world to drive a horse without spirit, but there is one recorded instance where a stage-coach driver covered himself with glory by doing just that thing. He was an old-timer, this driver, and one afternoon in the days of long ago he and his coach-and-four came rattling up to the tavern door like an avalanche. As the coach stopped, one of the horses dropped dead.

"That was a very sudden death," remarked a by-stander.

"That sudden!" coolly responded the driver. "That 'oss died at the top of the hill nine miles back, sir; but I wasn't going to let him down till I got to the regular stoppin' place."—Harper's Young People.

Increase of Suicides in Austria.

The increase in the number of suicides in Austria, which is stated to have been marked in the sixties and seventies, fell off in the ten years 1880-'90. Since the latter date, however, it has again become noticeable. In 1891 the number of suicides was 872, in the following year it was 903, and last year it reached 1,005.

APPIN ROAD NOTES.

Planting is about finished in this section. The recent warm showers have caused a smile to o'erspread the countenances of our farmers and evoked a prayer of thankfulness to Him who has promised a "seed time and harvest."

Our popular teacher, Mr. John Morrow, has resumed his duties after spending a pleasant vacation. His genial presence amongst us again, at his old post, is welcomed by parents and pupils. Mr. Morrow is an attentive, painstaking teacher, and we hope the district may be fortunate enough to secure his services for another year.

Divine service is held regularly in our neat, tidy little church, which, through the efforts of our good people, was completed last fall. The services are well attended and the congregation deeply impressed and greatly moved by Rev. Mr. Fisher's fervent preaching of the gospel. In the unavoidable absence of Rev. Mr. Fisher, Mr. William Beer, who has been a generous donor to our church, occupies the pulpit with much acceptance. The peace and consolation which the truths of the gospel has brought to our people has already repaid them twenty-fold for the sacrifice they made to complete their church.

It is rumored that some of our prominent young men, realizing that it is "not good for man to be alone," contemplate taking unto themselves, at an early date, a fair partner to accompany them through life. We hope that all such partnerships may result in happiness and prosperity.

I understand the road machine was at work last week on the Melville Road. The machine was in charge of Supervisor John McKinnon, who in turn was supervised by Mr. Neil Shaw, of DeSable. The story is told that an inquisitive Liberal-Conservative asked his Grit neighbor why Mr. Shaw was supervising Mr. McKinnon, and was answered that last year the Government appointed no person to look after Supervisor McKinnon, and as a consequence of their neglect, he got things "a little mixed." This year the Government were determined to guard against a recurrence of last year's "muddling," and appointed Mr Shaw to keep an eye on Mr. McKinnon. It is feared, however, there will be trouble in the camp when operations begin on the Appin Road, as our genial friend, Mr. Gillespie, has equal claims with Mr. Shaw to the generalship of the machine, and is determined to press them. There is only one way to avert the threatening danger, and that is, as the Government seem determined to keep down boodling, regardless of expense, in every department of the public service, should they find it necessary to appoint a third official to watch Mr. Shaw and Mr. McKinnon, the position might be given to Mr. Gillespie as a graceful recognition of his past valuable services for the party. Then with Supervisor McKinnon in charge of the machine, Mr. Shaw supervising Mr. McKinnon and Mr. John Gillespie in command of all three, the interests of the country would be safe and their friends could point with pride to a Triumvirate of which the most fastidious grit might not feel ashamed.

I notice that a Melville Road correspondent of the Patriot announces that Mr. Peters has "constructed a saddle of taxation that will not chafe the public horse." Well, I cannot believe that any spirited horse would allow Mr. Peters to bestraddle him with his galling "taxation saddle" without kicking him into the middle of next week. It appears, however, there are some donkeys with so little spirit in them that they would go down on their knees for Premier Peters to mount and never once kick if he sent his spurs through their thick hides up to the rowels, but only louder bray "Behold the mighty man I carry."

Wonderful man Mr. Peters! Lawyer! statesman! philosopher! and saddle maker!! to His Most Serene Highness docile and subservient grit subjects of Prince Edward Island!!! As a fitting tribute to his many and varied attainments I would suggest to his admirers to have an equestrian statue of him erected in front of the Province building. The statue might be made to represent Mr. Peters bestraddling a scraggy coated piebald donkey, badly sprung at the knees on account of the weight of the ponderous taxation saddle" on which the Premier is seated. "Oh for a horse! a horse!! My kingdom for a horse!!!" His saddle bags and trapping might be labelled "broken promises, extravagance, favoritism, gerrymander, disfranchisement, mortgage vote, taxation, closed doors, boodle," and other appropriate mottos commemorative of the glorious reign of Peters & Co. To make the statue more awe inspiring and imposing, the Patriot might be induced to allow his celebrated roosters to stand as aides de camp to the Premier and thus prevent any vandal from laying sacriligious hands on the magnificent work of art. There year after year the statue would proudly and defiantly stand as an object-lesson to the young and ambitious legislators of Prince Edward Island, while the old might recount the "devices" and point in a moralizing way to the equine curiosity on which the great Mr. Peters rode into power. Poor Mr. Peters. How has the mighty fallen. Few can now be found "so poor to do him reverence." Even the little Prince Edward Islander is ashamed to couple his name as a Liberal with those of Blake, Laurier and Davies. Ah "this was the unkindest cut of all!!" And to cap the climax the Mellville Road correspondent of the Patriot announces that Mr. Peters has turned grit saddle maker and opened shop in the Provincial Building, where his wares may be seen by a curious public!

Poor Mr. Peters. Well may he exclaim, "O save me from my friends!"
