

THE ADVENTURES OF CAP'N STEPH'N

JEFF COLL, MATTHEW DORRELL, AND THE CAP'N

The Queen has commanded that Cap'n Steph'n must voyage across the sea to find a new route to China. But which sea? And what the heck is a China? This would prove to be Cap'n Steph'n's most difficult adventure yet.

Is this the sea that the Queen meant? No! This is merely a bog unfit for the Cap'n's craft. Besides, he has heard tales of a monster that dwells deep under the rancid surface of the bog. He checks his charts and decides to move along.

"Blimey," says the Cap'n. "I cannot get past this fence to access this sea port." The Cap'n decides to rest in a nearby inn and will attempt to find another point of entry farther down the coast in the morn.

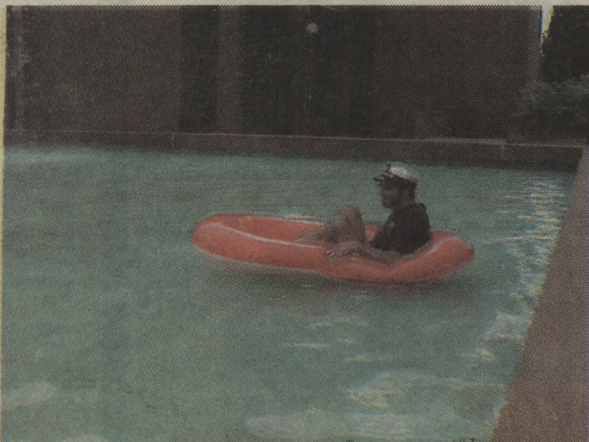

After a night of rest, some of the locals direct the Cap'n toward a mystical forest through which he may find passage to the sea ... and adventure! "Thanks for your services, kind gentlefolk," says the Cap'n as he hands the beer wench two dubloons.

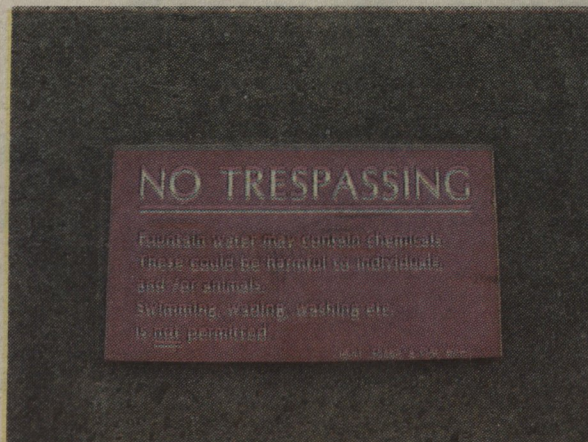

And so the Cap'n sets off on his journey through the mystical forest. Along the way, he answers the riddles three of a sinister dwarf, slays a giant, and kills some time talking to a normal-sized person.

Success! Cap'n Steph'n stumbles upon the sea after being chased from the forest by a herd of wild beasts.

Cap'n Steph'n launches his mighty galleon and sets off on his voyage to China. During his journey, he refreshes himself with a large mug of tasty seawater.

It is a shame that Cap'n Steph'n never stopped to read the label clearly marked at the beginning of the sea.

Forced to turn back due to dysentery, chafing, and a mild case of scurvy, the Cap'n weeps hot chemical tears. Poor Cap'n. Poor, poor Cap'n.