THE SMUGGLER OF ST. JEAN;

OR, THE

HIDALGO'S WARD.

A STORY OF THE SPANISH COAST.

BY SYLVANUS COBB, JR.

THE SMUGGLER.

Estelle and Nina were conducted into the low, small cabin, where some plain food was set before them, together with a bottle of wine. The lieutenant told them that he could not recommend the bread as being what good bread ought to be; but he could assure them that the vaults of San Martin never held better wine. After thus speaking he left them to themselves, and when he returned to the cabin the bread had been eaten, and part of the wine drank. And now what was the lady's pleasure?

Estelle seemed afraid to ask what most she desired.

'Perhaps,' said Leon, who guessed the cause of her hesitation, 'you would like to be landed at Denia.'

'I should like,' replied the Senorita, 'to make my way as soon as possible to the Castle of San Martin.'

'Then I will take you thither without touching at Denia. Rest you easy, and you shall see your home before night.'

Leon left the cabin again, and shortly afterwards the girls heard the order given for raising the anchor.

'We have found a friend,' said Nina, as she heard the voice of their deliverer bearing orders to the crew.

'A noble friend,' responded Estelle.

'What a grand-looking man he is,' pursued Nina.

Estelle nodded assent. After a pause the Moorish maid went on:

'For you, who are a Count's daughter, such a man can have but little attraction; but for me, who am but a poor serving girl, he hath positive charms. I declare, lady, if he should offer me his hand this very day, and I knew that he loved me, I should accept him.'

Estelle's fingers worked nervously in the folds of her mantle, and her teeth closed upon her nether lip until the blood almost broke through the delicate skin.

'Don't talk so foolishly, Nina. What do you suppose the smuggler wants of such a wife as you or I would make.'

'Mercy! I didn't say you, dear lady; I only spoke of myself.'

'Well--and what could he want with such a wife as you would make?

'Ah, Senorita,' replied the maid, shaking her head solemnly, 'you don't know how I could love such a man as that. I think I could love him so devotedly that my influence might be sufficient to lead him to some safer life.'

'You don't know how very foolishly you talk,' said Estelle, arising from her seat, and moving towards the stern, where there were two little grated windows. 'I hope you will not let Leon Murillo hear you.'

'Santa Dios! what do you think of me?'

'I meant no chiding, Nina—Come here. think we are in motion'

Just then Leon came to the companion way, and asked the Senorita if she would not like to come on deck. He said the vessel was under sail, and would soon be passing out into the open sea. Estelle very readily expressed her desire to accept the invitation; and, furthermore, when the young contrabandist extended his hand to help her up the ladder, she took it with rather more fervor than she thought. Had she possessed a jealous disposition, or had Nina been in the habit of taking undue liberties, it might have seemed as though she thus grasped the lieutenant's hand in order that no one else should share the privilege. She became magnanimous when she reached the deck, and, with her own hand, assisted her maid up the narrow ladder.

It was a pleasant scene that opened before them as the felucca passed out through the deep cut in the wall of rock, and entered the broad sea. Estelle stood by Leon's side, and asked him many questions, all of which he answered promptly and kindly, and with show of more than ordinary intelligence. And finally, he began to ask questions. He asked the maiden concerning the castle; and concerning the people that lived upon the estate; and concerning the estates of her father; and then he asked concerning the character of Don Bernardo 'Acosta. This question touching her guardian was asked at a most unfortunate time; for she was exasperated against him, and one of his most cruel acts of neglect was fresh in her mind. She spoke quickly and bitterly, denouncing the alcalde as an unjust, mercenary man.

'Padre Santo!' muttered the youth, between his set teeth, 'I should like to place my hand upon him. I have seen him, Senorita, and I do not like him; and, what is more, I am sure he does not like me.'

'How can he dislike you?' asked Estelle, with considerable interest. 'What have you ever done to harm him?'

'I know not,' replied Leon, shaking his head, 'unless he hates me because I am a smuggler. Perhaps he thinks the smugglers of Saint Jean had some hand in stealing his child away from him many years ago. At any rate, he hates us—I am sure of it.'

'I think he has brought himself to hate everything that is good,' said Nina, with a tightening of her lips.

'Never mind,' cried the youth, who saw that Estelle was troubled; 'his hate will not trouble me. In fact,' he added, snapping his fingers, and smiling, 'I think I would rather have his hatred than have his confidence.'

At this juncture one of the sailors came aft, and asked touching the look out forward.

'There is no need of it,' the lieutenant answered. 'When we reach the point of the cape you may put me ashore in the boat; we will not run the felucca in.'

Other matters now demanded Leon's attention, and he was kept busy until the vessel was brought-to off the point of Cape San Martin, when the boat was pulled up alongside, and four of the crew entered and took the oars. The officer then handed the females down; and when he had secured his hornbeam stick, and taken a seat near them, the oars were dropped into the water. The distance to the shore was short, and ere long Estelle once more stood upon the beach of San Martin, where every nook and crook was familiar. She had commenced to thank her kind deliverer; but he quickly stopped her.

'Not yet, lady. My work is not wholly done. Between here and the castle is the forest where the old danger met you, and it is not impossible that danger may be there still. I will go with you to the castle.'

'But—good sir——'

'Lady, if my company is unwelcome—if you would prefer——'

'O, stop, Senor! How can you speak so. How could I hold your company unwelcome after what you have done for me. I spoke because I thought you might wish to be with your vessel.'

'There is no need of my being on board again until to-morrow, and, furthermore, I should not feel safe to leave you here unprotected. I cannot do it. I will say nothing about my pleasure; I will speak only of my duty. What say you?'

'Indeed, sir,' replied Estelle, with a tremulous lip and a brightening eye, 'I cannot refuse to speak the truth since you assure me that my pleasure will not burden you.'

'Enough, lady. I thank you.'

Leon sent back the men with the boat, and then turned and walked with the girls toward the forest. It was a full league, or more, to the castle; but they tired not upon the road The scenery was rich and varied and the conversation was animated. Estelle told of her little adventures in the forest: and Leon Murillo told of his more exciting adventures upon the sea and the coast. At length they reached the castle, and at the drawbridge the youth stopped to take his leave. The Senorita invited him to enter the dwelling, for rest and refreshment; but he shook his head.

'I need no rest, lady; nor do I need refreshment; so I will bid you adieu here.'

'But,' said Estelle, 'how shall I ever repay you for the service you have rendered? I owe you more than life.'

'Gentle lady, let not that thought trouble you. If you wish to grant me a favor, let it be this: Remember me sometimes in your prayers, and allow me to believe that you are my friend.——Ah! I think it is your guardian approaching. One word: You will think kindly of Leon Murillo?'

'O, yes—yes—always! God bless you! Good spirits guard you ever!'

'ANGEL!' As the youthful contrabandist uttered this word he pressed the unresisting hand of the maiden to his lips, and on the instant he had turned, and was hurrying away.

Estelle d'Avila stood and watched the manly form as it passed under the shadow of the thick leaved oaks, and some words which fell from her lips were caught by Nina's ear. They were not meant for speech—they were simply the form of a passing thought,—but they had fallen, and if they had loosed a secret from the heart it was a secret no longer.

CHAPTER VI.

THE WAYFARER.

Don Bernardo d'Acosta had been very near when the contrabandist turned away, and he must have overheard the last words that were spoken as the friends parted. Of course he must have wondered where his ward had come from, and how she had escaped from the Gipsies; but yet he did not immediately place himself in her way. There seemed to be something else upon his mind, which, to him, of more importance. He stepped aside and concealed himself behind a clump of oleanders until the girls had passed, and when they had dissapeared within the domicile he came forth and called to a man who had been standing near the porters lodge.

The man who answered this summons was a small, black eyed black haired, wiry person, of middle age, with a countenance indicative of some cunning, and possessing features of a strong Hebrew cast. This was Francisco Alvarez, the alcade's secretary; and as he approached his master he nodded his head in token of his readiness to listen. His long term of service in the alcalde court had given him the habit of expressing himself in as few words as possible.

'Francisco, did you see that man who came with my ward?'

'Yes. Senor'

'Do you know him?'

'I think he is a Smuggler.'

'I know he is that,' said the alcalde, with sharp emphasis, 'and I wish to know more Can you tell me more?'

'I think his name is Leon Murillo.'

'Bah! I know that, too.'

'I knew no more, Senor.'

'Then go and find out. Make all haste after the young rascal and follow him wherever he may go. I wish to know all about him. I would know whence he came, who he is, who his parents were, and——

Francisco interrupted his master with a nod.

'You understand, eh?

'Perfectly.'

'Then I leave it all in your hands. And now be off.'

After his clerk had gone, Don Bernardo turned towards the domicile, where he sent for Estelle to join him in the library. The maiden obeyed him as soon as she had finished her toilette, and as she entered his presence she really felt as though he would blame her for having suffered herself to be brought back. But the don was not so blindly foolish as that. He received his ward with open arms, and exhibited many outward signs of gratitude.

'My dear child,' he said, as he held her by the hand, 'you do not know what joy it gives me to see you back again. You know not what hours of painful anxiety I have passed. I have sent my servants in every direction, and the whole of my constabulary force has been in requisition. But how has it happened? Sit down and tell me'

For some little time Estelle knew not what to say. That her guardian lied to her most basely she was well satisfied, and her first impulse was to charge him with his perfidy; but she took a wiser thought. It she kept her own counsel she would hold an advantage. She knew his baseness, and the clue thus gained might lead he the more readily to understand and thwart his intentions in the future. It was a severe trial; it cost her a mighty effort; but she succeeded in controlling herself so that her guardian did not mistrust how much she knew.

'These accursed Smugglers kidnapped you, did they?' the don said, after Estelle had taken a seat.

'No Senor,' replied the girl, with rather more emphasis than was necessary. 'The Smugglers set me at liberty.'

'Ah,—is that so?'

When Estelle found the gaze of her guardian fixed upon her as though he would look directly down into her heart, she realized that her tone had betrayed considerable feeling; and, to make matters worse, she felt the warm blood rising to her cheeks and temple. Again, as she met the unkind, insolent gaze, did the impulse to charge full upon the man's falsehood rise within her bosom; but she put it back, and finally succeeded in gaining a control over herself which she felt she could not again lose.

'If the Smugglers set you at liberty, it may have been the Gipsies who took you off,' pursued the don, after he had looked down into his ward's heart.

'Yes, Senor'

'Do you know who did it? Could you identify the rascals?'

'Yes. Two men seized us. Their names were Juan Bravo and Gurbano. Perhaps you know them?'

'I know them?'

'No, Estelle, I know them not. But go on with your story. Tell me all about it.'

The maiden, now grown quite calm, commenced her narrative with the appearance of the two Gipsies at the foot of the cliff of San Martin, and went on to the deliverance by the Smuggler. Touching the passage beneath the mountain, and the wonderful harbor of Saint Jean, she said nothing. She simply told that she and Nina slipped away from their captors by night, and made their way to the sea coast; and that the Gipsies followed them, and would have recaptured them, had not one of the men belonging to the contrabandistas made his appearance just in season to save them.

'How many Gipsies were there?'

'Three.'

'Was Juan Bravo of the number?'

'Yes'

'And Gurbano?'

'Yes.

'And the third man—who was he?'

'They called him Matubar. He was an ugly man,'

'How many smugglers came to your assistance?'

'Only one, Senor.'

'Was it the young man whom I saw coming towards the castle with you to-day.'

'Yes.'

'And do you tell me that he overcame the three stout Gipsies?'

'He did, Senor; and his only weapon was a stick. If you could have seen him you would have said that 'twas wonderful.'

'Did you learn the fellow's name?'

'His name is Leon Murillo.'

'What a pity such a man should be such a villian,' said the Don.

'Villain!' echoed Estelle, her eyes flashing, and her fingers tightening.

'Aye, my child. He is an outlaw.'

Estelle came very near doing a foolish thing; but she curbed her tongue in season, and held it firmly between her tightly closed lips. She could not conceal her indignation, but she managed to keep her thoughts.

'Were you not aware, Senorita, that all Smugglers were outlaws? Did you not know that I should be called upon to hang that wretch if he should be brought before my court?'

'I did not know that they hung folks for smuggling,' said Estelle, with some show of concern.

'It can be done, my child.'

The Senorita arose and turned away, for she could bear the gaze of her guardian no longer; and she was highly gratified when she found that he did not wish to detain her.

'Cajaro!' muttered the alcalde, after his ward had gone. 'I must keep my eyes upon that girl. I know how these things work. Maidens of her age, with such blood in their veins, and such roses upon their lips, must have something to love. She will not love me — she hates me; and she knows that I will not countenance the approach of any suitor from among those of her own station. Such being the case, is it impossible that she should love this Leon Murillo? Padre Santo! I must find out who he is. Infierno! what if he should——Bah! What is the use? it cannot be.'

And thus speaking, the Don arose from his seat, and paced up and down the floor; and when he became tired of that, he put on his hat, and buckled on his sword, and went out into the court.

THE ROAD TO HEATH

AND LONG LIFE

SECURED BY

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Impurities of the Blood.

In selecting the most appropriate medicine for a particular ailment, there may be some difficulty unless one can be found to purify, regulate, and improve the quality of the blood. These Pills possess and exert these three qualifications in an extraordinary degree. They enable the stomach to digest any ordinary food, increase the secretory powers of the liver, cleanse and purify the blood, expel all morbid matter, and throw into the circulation the purest elements for sustaining and repairing the frame.

Weakness and Debility.

How many persons suffer from debility without knowing the causes why they are feeble! In many cases the stomach is the aggressor. Holloway's Pills have long been famed for regulating a disordered stomach, and restoring its healthy digestive tone; they are, therefore, confidently recommended as a never failing remedy in all cases where the constitution, from any cause, has become impaired or weakened.

Disease of the Head and Heart

These formidable diseases are, unfortunately, frequent occurrence; for the most part they creep on gradually, but may be prevented by proper precautions. Holloway's Pills are the surest preservatives against all derangements of the brain, and are the speediest correctors of irregular circulation. If they be taken without delay, when tingling in the limbs, drowsiness, or giddiness comes on, the effect will be marvellous.

Females of all Ages & Classes

The fame of these Pills is partly based upon the beneficial effects they have upon the constitutions of females. From the domestic servant to the peeress universal favor is accorded to them for their invigorating and purifying properties, which render them so safe and invaluable in all disorders peculiar to the sex. Obstructions of every kind, either in young persons entering into womanhood or approaching the turn of life—the most critical period—may be radically removed by a recourse to these Pills.

All Disorders affecting the Liver, Stomach and Bowels

Whenever the stomach, liver, or bowels are disordered by high living, climate, over-indulgence undue exertion or other causes, these fine regulating Pills will soon rectify the evil, and speedily bring back energy, strength and cheerfulness to the frame where previously all was lassitude, gloom and dejection.

Despondency, Low Spirits.

The misery occasioned by a disordered digestion is, unfortunately, felt by most. These famous Pills should be taken in appropriate doses to adjust the disturbed functions. They dispel headache, biliousness, nausea, lowness of spirits, and all similar ailments. A course of these invaluable purifying Pills never fails in removing the cause of such morbid affections, without subjecting the sufferer to any inconvenience.

Influenza, Diptheria, Bronchitis Coughs and Colds.

In our changeable climate few persons escaped without colds, sore throats, influenza, diptheria, or bronchitis, for all of which these famous corrective Pills may be taken with the certainty of effecting a cure. While the Pills are expelling all impurities from the body generally, Holloway's Ointment should be well rubbed upon the chest and throat it will penetrate the skin, reduce inflammation and restore lasting soundness.

Holloway's Pills are the best Remedy known in the world for the following diseases:
