ASTRONAUT GAGS IT UP

Astronaut Gordon Cooper, scheduled to orbit the earth for eight days with his co-pilot, Charles Conrad, gags it up Tuesday during the final medical briefing at Cape Kennedy. Submitting to the fun is Dr. Charles Berry, chief of the NASA medical programs. Cooper and Conrad's launch is scheduled for Thursday. (NASA Photo via AP Wirephoto).

Buildings In Soviet Union Are Showing More Variety

By JOHN BST

MOSCOW (CP)—Skyscrapers, long frowned upon, are rising again in the big cities of the Soviet Union.

A monotonous trend has passed and buildings are showing a little more variety and imagination.

During the latter half of Nikita Khrushchev's era, regulations against tall buildings were rigidly enforced. Five storeys was the standard, although occasionally a structure went to nine.

Now buildings are rising to a height of 30 storeys.

According to the free-wheeling Khrushchev, buildings of more than five storeys were "uneconomical — evidently meaning they required elevators. Many observers suspect however that his ruling was more subjective than scientific —that it was a reaction against architectural modes that had prevailed under Stalin.

Stalin, whose public image Khrushchev sought to destroy, was responsible for about half a dozen skyscrapers in Moscow ranging up to 32 storeys during the last years of his life.

The most imposing and the most famous is mammoth Moscow State University, one of the biggest buildings in the world, which rises atop the Lenin Hills some distance from the centre of the city.

LOOKED LIKE CAKES

The Stalin edifices were all built on a tiered pattern in the shape of a wedding cake. Many people, Russians and foreigners alike, regard them as monstrosities: impressive in an overwhelming way but thoroughly ugly.

Besides Moscow, a number were built in other Soviet cities and in East Berlin, Warsaw and some other East European cities.

Just as Khrushchev banished the Stalin architectural cult, so Mr. K's successors are unceremoniously banishing his.

They argue that Khrushchev and his followers ignored the cost of the additional land needed for relatively large numbers of low-rise buildings.

In other words, now it has been decided that the high-rise is economical after all.

Less than a year after Khrushchev's overthrow, tall buildings are going up in many parts of Moscow. Among them is a 30-storey headquarters building for the Council of Mutual Economic Assistance. Situated at the head of Kalinin Street, half a mile west of the Kremlin, it will form a triangle with two other high-rise buildings in the same area.

They are the Soviet foreign ministry and the Ukraine Hotel —both wedding-cake structures of the Stalinist vogue.

FLOORS ADDED

Also in the same district, two new 20-storey hotels are planned. Four 27-storey apartment blocks are going up on Kalinin Street.

New buildings ranging from nine to 20 storeys are under construction or planned for various other parts of the city.

Many of these were designed before Khrushchev's exit last October. But the building plans were altered later to add more floors.

Other Soviet cities are undergoing the same process of change. New buildings in Leningrad for instance will go up to 23 storeys.

Draft plans for the new public buildings show an attempt to break away from the stylized, squarish and rather drab architecture that has prevailed in the Soviet Union.

Architects no doubt emboldened by recent rends seemingly encouraged by the newleader-encouraged by the new leadership, have been speaking out for fundamental changes in apartment design also. Apartment blocks account for the great bulk of Soviet urban construction.

CALL FOR IMPROVEMENT

Some months ago a group of architects called in a Moscow newspaper for an end to "the dismal and monotonous appearance of our apartment blocks."

They also suggested that something should be done to improve the quality of construction.

"Ugly black hermetic seams intersect the buildings," they complained, adding to the roster of shortcomings: "Dull paints that quickly lose their color, shabby facades, untidy unfinished blocks, brushwood that is supposed to signify greenery."

The Communist party newspaper Pravda threw its weight behind the movement for improved building and architectural techniques when it said editorially: "We need not dull grey buildings but comfortable modern ones."

Pravda added that it was "high time" to think about better technical equipment for apartment buildings.

The movement to tall buildings has developed so swiftly and so forcibly that some architects are worried for fear national edifices and monuments will lose their prominence.

Doctor of architecture V. Oltarzevsky wrote recently that the Kremlin itself is in danger of being obscured by high-rise buildings including a new 23-storey hotel just across from it at the foot of Gorky Street.

A high building is a "strong weapon in the arsenal of an architect," he said. "It can give a beautiful artistic effect as well as bring harm."

Contributions Being Asked To Centennial Year Kitty

HALIFAX (CP) — Canadians will be asked to contribute to a 1967 centennial year kitty to provide $10,000,000 in aid for emerging nations, State Secretary Lamontagne said here.

Speaking in French to delegates at the annual meeting of L'Association Canadienne des Educateurs de Langue Francaise, Mr. Lamontagne said the government has decided to put up $250,000 to get the campaign started.

The money will be given to the Canadian committee for International Co-operation Year. The money will allow the committee "to launch a big subscription campaign among Canadians aimed at collecting a fund of $10,000,000 which will be offered in the form of international aid in 1967," Mr. Lamontagne said.

Modern man faces bigger challenges in the elimination of poverty than he does in the world of the atom or the world of space, the minister said.

MUST TAKE ACTION

"We must adopt with resolution practical measures at all levels—economic, cultural and social—to eliminate or reduce the flagrant inequalities, the causes of discontentment between men, the sickness, the ignorance."

Canada can be proud of her role in extending an international helping hand, Mr. Lamontagne said. The country provided $226,000,000 in 1964 for economic aid to developing countries.

Canadian experts in many fields had taken their skills to other countries under technical aid programs.

"And in a field which interests you particularly," he told the delegates, "I point out that for the year 1964-65 Canada is spending a total of $4,000,000 and this sum will be renewed for the succeeding year, for aid to education in 26 French-language countries of Africa and Southeast Asia."

Canada had qualities that make the country a good international helper — riches and technical knowledge, a past that was not burdened by a colonial experience, and two languages.

HAVE SPECIAL ROLE

French - Canadians particularly have a special role to play in the former French colonies in Africa, Mr. Lamontagne said.

"French-Canadians have an important international missios to accomplish but they are not sufficiently conscious of it."

This would not come about by French - Canadians isolating themselves. They should "develop and enlarge their traditional missionary vocation" to make a full contribution to the welfare of all mankind.

Mr. Lamontagne suggested increased cultural exchanges. In the past, Canada had maintained close cultural links with France and Britain. But Canada had attained greater cultural stature and now had something to offer to other countries.

While keeping the connection with the two mother countries, Canada should develop other broader cultural and economic links.

Text of the speech was released to the press in advance of delivery.
