LOVE'S OWN.

Where Love built his humble nest
Tired and thankful did I rest.
Sweeter rest there could not be.
Though the black night covered me,
And Love whispered, "Art thou blest?"
And I answered, "Love is best."

Where Love built his nest I knew
Thorns beneath the rose leaves grew.
Sweeter roses could not be.
Though the keen thorns crept to me,
And Love whispered, "Art thou blest?"
And I answered, "Love is best."

Where Love built his nest a blight
Blow from lands of Death and Night.
All that life had held of sweet
Lay in ashes at Love's feet.
Yes I folded to his breast—
Weeping, he whispered, "Love is best."

So, with Love abiding still,
I am Love's, to do his will,
So his lips on mine are laid,
So his hand my couch hath made.
Still he whispers, "Art thou blest?"
Still I answer, "Love is best."

ARTIST AND CRITIC.

The Former Owes a Debt to the Latter, Although Seldom Acknowledged.

The debt which the artist owes the critic is not a small one, nor is it any the less actual for being commonly lost sight of. It is a current belief that the public is educated by the mere existence of the good work of art, and not by the elucidation of its commentators. Education by absorption is perhaps the most deep going and far-reaching form of education, but it has never been found practicable to rely upon it solely in other branches of mental acquisition. Then why believe that it can be relied upon solely for the proper development of the art sense? In effect it never is and cannot be. How many people care about poetry, let us say—feel it, are reached by it? And can one doubt that if a more loving and careful analysis of such of its products as appear today were undertaken by critics competent to convey to an indifferent public the perennial value of its ministrations, some of the unresponsiveness of the average reader would disappear, and some perception of the eternal significance of the poet's message would extend to the classes now given over to nothing more tonic in the way of reading than the daily newspaper? We say that one is born with the feeling for the enjoyment of poetry and another is not. Not so. At least, to say this is not to say all. The feeling for the highest aesthetic enjoyment and appreciation is cultivable, and cultivable as is any other faculty, by studying the material to be enjoyed, by reverently conning its constituent parts. In short, a vague, dreamy delight in the presence of some beautiful work of the artistic spirit is not enough. It is not enough for intelligence, it is not enough especially to produce the atmosphere of interest which stimulates the painter, the musician, the writer, to sustained effort and keeps him true to the pitch. We love best what we know best. To rest in loving without knowing is often the merest sentimentality—a sentimentality toward which our Germanic forefathers had always a leaning, while it was especially antagonistic to the lucid Greek and Latin spirit.—"The Superfluous Critic," by Aline Gorreu, in Century.

LAW OF SELF DEFENSE.

The English Theory of Where Protection Ends and Revenge Begins.

The right of self defense is by some old writers declared to be inherent in all men by the law of nature. Now, these "natural rights" are all very well, but they are not recognized by the law of Great Britain. It is the law that a man may defend himself, his wife, child or servant from physical aggression. He may also repel by force a forcible attack upon his property. When you, or your wife, child, or servant is attacked, or threatened with violence in such a manner as reasonably to lead you to believe that violence is about to be used, you may resist the aggressor. And as the best mode of resistance is very often to attack, you may lawfully follow the advice given by an old prize-fighter to a pupil—i. e., "get in the first whack."

But self defense must be moderate. It must not be totally disproportionate to the attack. For instance, if a hulking ruffian runs at me with a knife, I may shoot him. But if he runs at me merely with his fists clinched, and I shoot him dead with a revolver, I shall probably be hanged by the neck. Not that the law expects a man to be calm and cool and collected in all circumstances. By no means. For instance, if the said burly ruffian rushes at me with clinched fists, evidently meaning mischief, and I hit him with a heavy stick on the back of the ear, I may kill him. But I shall not be hanged for that. I had a right to use the stick, and in the circumstances I am not to be supposed to be cool enough to aim for a spot not likely to be fatal. Again, self defense must not develop into revenge. Thus, if I am threatened with a knife, and by the timely display of a pistol I frighten my assailant so that he runs away, I must not shoot after him. If I do, I am just as liable as though he had never threatened me, because I shoot at him not in self defense, but by way of punishment or revenge.—Family Lawyer.

LAW OF THE UMBRELLA.

An Important Opinion That Has Been Ascribed to Lord Coleridge.

The law as to umbrellas was settled once for all by Lord Coleridge in a leading English case. His lordship held: "Umbrellas, properly considered, are a part of the atmospheric or meteorological condition, and as such there can be no individual property right in them. In Sampson versus Thompson defendant was charged with standing on plaintiff's front steps during a storm and thereby soaking up a large quantity of rain to which plaintiff was entitled. But the court held that the rain was any man's rain, no matter where it fell. It follows, therefore, that the umbrella is any man's umbrella. In all ages rain and umbrellas have gone together, and there is no reason why they should be separated in law. An umbrella may, under certain circumstances—the chief of which is possession—take on the attributes of personal property, just as if a man set a tub and catch a quantity of rainwater, that rainwater will be considered as his personal belonging while it is in his tub. But if the sun evaporate the water and if it is rained down again or if the tub is upset and the water spilled then the attribute of personal ownership instantly disappears. So if a man hold his umbrella in his hand it may be considered a personal belonging, but the moment it leaves his hand it returns to the great, general, indivisible, common stock of umbrellas, whether the law will not attempt to pursue it."

So far as we know there has never been a successful appeal from this decision.—Chicago News.

A Disturbing Sermon.

Many years ago an English clergyman in a small town preached as his own a sermon, one that he had bought, and which had been originally preached in London when the plague was raging in that city. After reproving the vice of the people, the sermon went on:

"For this vice it is that God has visited you and your families with that cruel scourge, the plague, which is now spreading everywhere in this town."

At his uttering these words the people were all so thunderstruck that the chief magistrate was obliged to go to the pulpit and to ask him:

"For God's sake, sir, pardon the interruption, and inform me where the plague is, that I may instantly endeavor to prevent its further spreading."

"The plague, sir," replied the preacher. "I know nothing about the plague. Whether it is in the town or not, it is in my family."

Historical and Clerical.

The London Journal of Education publishes the following schoolboy answers, which are warranted genuine. To the question, "What do you know of Lord Wolseley?" the answer was given: "He was a minister of Henry VIII, who exclaimed, 'If I had served my God as I have served my king, I should not have been beheaded!'" The confusion between Wolseley and Wolsey is perhaps not remarkable, but a post mortem speech of this kind deserves notice. A better story, however, is of a definition of "titles" which will be of special interest to the church and stage guild—"things worn by ladies in circuses and pantomimes."

Tired.

"The children wish me to ask you to tell them some fairy stories," said the politician's wife.

"My dear," was the reply, "I can't do it. I have been talking to a great many voters today. I must have some relaxation from the routine of business."—Washington Star.

The Way It Struck Her.

He referred in the casual way that is characteristic of members of his profession to an operation at his hospital that day in which a man's rib had been removed. "And why did they do it," said the sweet girl. "Are there not enough women in the world as it is?"—New York Sun.
