ELLEN'S DIARY

Stars Gleam Brightly Over The Silent Valley

The stars—how brightly they gleam this clear winter-night! And low lone and silent is the valley below. No wind wanders now, nor vagrant snowflake. There is peace and silence over all.

James, husband of this home, stands at the telephone. Of wall vintage it is. And the original one installed to take us out to join the rural line, which for many years has served, and still serves in a neighbourly fashion, the farms for a distance about.

We still recall the wonder and thrill of its arrival. And we remember this being some time before the advent of radio, that most of all, we felt its coming would remove from our midst that sense of isolation which then descended on farms, when wintry storms forbade other communication from the world, far or near.

Ours, as it happened was not among the first telephones on this line, a few years having passed, before James considered the time was ripe for him to become a parton, and thus make this youngish dream of the farmwife come true.

Only the other day stopping a moment in the yard to observe the wire which comes in to us above the millstream and front meadow, James smiled at a memory.

"Do you remember, Ellen, when they were bringing the telephone to us, by way of the millpond, the raft, the linesmen were using, tipped suddenly and they found themselves in fairly deep water! It was well they hadn't come to the deep channel, or it might not have had the happy ending it did—only a wetting they got. A long time ago, that was. But "he sighed" the years have surely flown since!"

News of this farm's doings on this first day of our workaday week, James speaks of now to Rob, a mile away.

"Yes" he says, quite modestly, we think, "we managed to get them away . . . They were fairly hard to manage — not out of the stable since the fall. Had to lead them to the truck at the road. Weighed? Oh they did not bad at all . . . Not so cold tonight, is it? No, the glass is warmer by a few degrees. . . And how did you do today? Did you get your work all done? Plenty to keep a fellow busy now, isn't there?"

So odd ones of our cattle—kind went from Alderlea today to beef. And at such a sale, it is the matter of the poundage, which brings the chuckles, because all the farmers, including Mack, and often Jamie and Gage have, before this, reckoned the probable weights. But now, whose guess was nearest? The younger farmer remembering teases: "You young'uns will need to make better reckonings than that if you're to make stockmen!" Which brings an answering "Well, he was so small, it was pretty hard to judge his weight—nothing much to work on, you know! Besides, I only glanced at him."

"You'll have to take a longer look than that" the younger farmer will chuckle." Or else you won't stay in the farming-business too long!"

"Here we go again!" Granddaughter commented smilingly this morning, getting away to a new week of classes.

And here we go, all of us—and happily, eh? into our brand new week.

Until tomorrow — Diary — — Good-night. . . . .

MARY HAWORTH

Divorcee Inquires About Using Married Surname

Dear Mary Haworth: I am recently divorced. 28 years old, with two young children. All my girlhood friends are married and live quite a distance away. I live in a quiet neighborhood

I would like to build new friendships but just don't know where to start. I have gone to our church parties for adults but haven't found many persons my age.

I plan to return to work as soon as I feel my children are adjusted to their new circumstances, but this won't be for six months or more.

I have retained my ex-husband's surname and would like to know if I am still addressed as Mrs. V? Also, how do I avoid propositions instead of just a nice evening when men know you are divorced? I try to indicate that I don't welcome that sort of thing.

I have seen advertisements for personal introductions and friendship clubs and wonder if these are worthwhile? I find few places where a woman can go alone and be accepted or enjoy herself.

I am completely at sea and hope you can steer me towards friends and companions. Thank you. — C. V.

Dear C. V.: If Jane Jones marries Sam Smith and later is divorced from him, she continues to be Mrs. Smith. But as a divorcee she is Mrs. Jane Jones Smith (no longer Mrs. Sam Smith) and is socially listed as Mrs. Jones Smith.

If she wishes to discard Mr. Smith's name and resume her maiden surname, there is legal precedence for such revision, usually transacted at the time of divorce. In which case, she then becomes Mrs. Jane Jones (not Miss Jane Jones).

How avoid propositions from men who regard divorcees as fair game? You probably can't. But you can learn to dismiss them with poise and without damage to self esteem.

Unfortunately, the divorcee tends unconsciously to downgrade her worth as a person and to feel, obscurely, that she wears a sandwich board of sorts which advertises her as "Failure, Rejected, Insecure" and the like in her social encounters, especially with men; and more particularly, with men on the make.

And men tend involuntarily to react or respond to a woman on the instinctual level—that is, with unconscious reference to her unconsciously felt appraisal of herself. Thus if a woman has had an unhappy, unsuccessful marriage (or a life history of defeat in relation to her father), thoughtless men are intangibly influenced to behave in ways that would penalize her further.

The dynamic antidote to this potentially destructive set-up is for the woman herself to become aware of her real identity as a child of God and of her inexplicable human dignity derived from that truth, which heartbreak experience cannot annul. And to become aware, also, of her self-advertised benighted immaturity of those wolves who would prey upon a woman in difficulties.

As she begins, in this fashion, to see life in perspective and to embrace religion for what it is—namely, the individual's conscious audience with God: Who is the source of our guidance, protection and every good gift—the divorcee will be able to cope with cad proposals in a serenely competent spirit.

For clues to companionship, you might read Jim and Janet Engleson's book "Parents Without Partners: A Guide for Divorced, Widowed or Separated Parents" (Dutton, publishers). It presents the combined viewpoints of both fathers and mothers who've been over the road ahead of you.

Also it tells the story of PWP (a discussion group for mutual help: Parents Without Partners), founded five years ago, with national headquarters at 80 Fifth Avenue, New York 11, N. Y., which keeps track of thousands of members enrolled in 40-some chapters. M. H.

"Last Chance" Idea Accounts For Julie Harris's Success

NEW YORK (AP)—Julie Harris, a human being on fire, plays a constant game with eternity.

She lives by a kind of "doctrine of the last chance."

"If you approach whatever you do with the idea that this might be your last day, your last chance to do it right," she said, "everything becomes terribly exciting. You can't be bored."

Miss Harris has so successfully transmitted her own quality of inner excitement to audiences that she has won nearly 20 acting awards. Her fellow performers regard her as one of the best of living actresses and hold her a bit in awe.

Julie, who recently completed a film role in Requiem of a Heavyweight, is currently starring in A Shot in the Dark, an early hit of the present Broadway season.

CHARACTERS LIVE

Onstage, Julie has a quicksilver genius that enables her to play a French maid or Queen Victoria and make them both seem real. Offstage, she is a somewhat shyer chameleon. She is small, slender, slow to speak and given to birdlike gestures. You can sense the hurried intensity in her, the hidden flame that fired her at the age of 11 to be a great actress. That flame still burns brightly.

"I'm afraid my biggest defect as a person is my drive to be a perfectionist," she said. "Sometimes a person who wants everything to be exactly right . . . to do everything exactly right . . . forgets the limitations of human frailty, even sometimes forgets love.

"After all, you cannot really reach perfection. You can only try to. When I feel that I have fallen short of what I want to do, it makes me unhappy."

IN SECOND PLACE

Julie puts achievement in her craft above the dollar.

"My greatest dream is to work with a permanent repertory company," she said. "Musicians, dancers, opera singers—they all work together with each other over long periods of time. That is the better way."

Julie, her husband, Manning Gurian, and their son, Peter, 6, live simply. In the city where she is reigning star Julie often rides the bus unrecognized.

These are her favorite things in life:

"My son, my husband, my work, flowers (I could look at gardens days without end), dancing, cooking, knitting, listening to guitars and ballad songs, blueberry pie, swimming, the dunes on Cape Cod, seagulls and the smell of pine forests."
