Soviet Visit Story Told By Columnist

EDITOR'S NOTE: Columnist Don Dedera travelled for three weeks in Russia with his wife, Nancy. His columns, written after he left Russia, were made available by the Arizona Republic, Phoenix, for transmission by The Associated Press to other member newspapers. Here is the first of five.

LENINGRAD — Like every Intourist guide we were to meet, Nina was admirably mannered and thoroughly trained. She was 36, had red hair suggesting a tint, and was made up with pink lipstick and mascara. She had made her own clothes, in Western style.

Without a free press, how lcan newspaper? I asked her.

"They may be seen in the state library," she said. "In the people's democracies it is believed that the captive capitalistic press should not be allowed to circulate."

"Without a free press, how can you make your own opinion count, in a country where there are no elections?"

"We do have elections," she said. "They are formalities, but before the voting the people nominate the candidates, by neighborhood meetings and meetings at factories. All differences are worked out in advance."

ASKS MANY QUESTIONS

I asked, "can a citizen complain about his government?"

"Yes," she said.

"Change his job?"

"If he gives notice, and is not badly needed."

"Get a letter published in Pravda?"

"Yes."

"Petition and sue the government?"

"In a sense."

"Start an opposition political party?"

"No counter - revolutionary movements are allowed."

"Strike for higher pay?"

"No! There has not been a strike since the revolution." Of this she seemed quite proud. Mind you, the debate was continuing in the most friendly fashion. Nina said:

"As our leaders were meeting to talk peace, you sent your (U-2) spy, Powers, with gold watches to buy our secrets. That was very bad news in Leningrad."

So I asked her: "What was Leningrad's reaction to the release of Gary Powers."

"Is he released?" asked Nina.

"Yes, he was exchanged months ago in Germany for your spy, Col. Rudolph Abel."

NEVER HEARD OF ABEL

Pravda, which means truth, at a cost of six rubles a year, is delivered daily to Nina's apartment door. But she never read about Abel.

For three days Nina kept my wife, Nancy, and me running on the tourist trails. As we passively followed her, we snapped judgments of the Russian people.

1. Women work at everything. We saw them tarring roads, breaking concrete with jackhammers, laying bricks, driving buses, mixing concrete. Because of Second World War casualties, there are 20,000,000 more women than men in the Soviet Union. Even the Russian mailmen are women.

2. Russian drivers are as mad as Ivan the Terrible. They have a disquieting habit of accelerating to full speed, turning off the ignition, and coasting to a crawl. They think it saves fuel.

3. Pedestrians are crazier than drivers. They surge across the intersections with no regard to signals, grudgingly parting for hurtling taxis.

JOKES WITHOUT LAUGHS

"Have you heard of our new spaceship?" a Russian will ask you. "It carries a man and a woman. They could not find an apartment in Leningrad." A Russian will tell you this joke, but he will not laugh.

4. Russians line up as automatically as geese. The Russian man stands in line for his newspaper; the Russian woman for strawberries and baby socks. An American resident told us he was once on a crowded bus, when suddenly everybody stepped off to run to a long line.

"What's for sale?" yelled the American.

"I don't know," shouted back a sprinting Russian. "But for such a long line, it must be good!"

5. Everybody reads. A cab driver has a novel open on the seat. Between floors, the elevator operator snatches paragraphs from a war story. The coat-checker at the Kirov Ballet is reading Hemingway.

6. Drinking is lusty, drunks plentiful. The government economic prohibition (vodka is $4.50 a half litre) has created the "bottle buddy" — a man with one ruble and a thirst. At the state liquor store he waits for three other thirsty men who also have single rubles. They go together, buy a bottle, gauge it with pencil lines, and chugalug their shares.

GIRLS' LEGS HAIRY

7. Men kiss freely on the mouth, and burly soldiers walk hand-in-hand.

8. American girlwatchers are disappointed in Russia. Soviet men like 'em fat. And Russian girls have hairy legs.

9. Russians constantly are eating on the streets. The far-and-away favorite is ice cream.

10. Manners are paradoxical. A polite Russian will not whistle, will not wear an overcoat into a building, will not put his hands in his trousers pockets, will not cross his legs while seated, will not scatter litter.

But the same Russian will elbow his way through a crowd, spit in the street, slurp his soup, and go to the opera house in his shirtsleeves.

Egypt Fires Four Rockets

CAIRO (Reuters) — Egypt fired four rockets into space from a desert testing ground 50 miles from here Saturday, and President Gamal Abdel Nasser said other rockets were in large-scale production.

Nasser, who watched the launchings, told reporters the rockets did not carry atomic warheads. "We are against that," he declared.

The first two Conqueror rockets travelled about 375 miles. The other two rockets, named Victorious travelled about 230 miles.

When asked the purpose of the firing Nasser countered, "What is the purpose of a rocket?"

The Egyptian leader said the only military significance the rocket had "is the range they reach."

The first launchings were made 14 months ago and the rockets now are in large-scale production "otherwise we would not have been able to spare four for testing," he said.

(In Tel Aviv, Israeli circles expressed no undue concern while agreeing the firings may well signify the start of a new phase in the Middle East arms race.

NOT SURPRISED

(Israeli radio said: "This launching didn't come as a surprise, as for many years foreign experts have been working in Egypt in the rocket industry It looks also very probable that many of the parts constituting these rockets have been bought in foreign countries and assembled in Egypt."

(Israel launched a multistage, quarter-ton rocket on July 5, 1961. 50 miles above the Mediterranean.)

Cairo radio said the rockets were "made and launched" in Egypt.

Western diplomatic sources said there have been indications that research work has been going on with the help of a West German expert, Eugen Saenger.

DEFICIT DECREASES

LONDON (Reuters) — Britain's trade deficit decreased sharply in June as a result of record exports, the Board of Trade announced Monday. The figures showed that increased exports for the sixth straight month had lowered Britain's trade deficit to £39,500,000 compared with £59,200,000 in May. June exports totalled £317,000,000.

The bidding:

Opening lead—queen of clubs.

The opportunity to take a finese is an irresistible lure to many declarers. While the finesse is undoubtedly a valuable weapon to use in many situations, it is nevertheless a much abused instrument of play.

The point is that the finesse is a play that may or may not succeed, depending upon the location of a particular card or cards held by the defense. It should therefore not be used whenever there is an alternative line of play that obviates the risk of the finesse and at the same time accomplishes the desired result.

Here is a hand that shows how the principle is applied. South is playing four hearts and West leads the queen of clubs. At this point declarer sees that he is sure to lose two club tricks and a diamond and that the result of the contract appears to depend upon the success of a spade finesse.

Superficially, it would seem that South, after drawing trumps, should lead a low spade to the king and finesse the jack on the return. This play will succeed if it turns out that East has the queen of spades, but will fail if it turns out that West has the queen.

However, this is not the recommended line of play. Let's say East wins the first two tricks in clubs and then leads the jack of clubs. Declarer ruffs with the nine and then draws three rounds of trumps.

South next plays the king of diamonds. When West wins with the ace, as seems likely from the bidding, the hand is over. It does not matter to declarer whether West returns a spade or a diamond, or where the queens of spades or diamonds are located.

A spade return automatically causes the spade loser to disappear, while a diamond return —whether or not West has the queen—establishes a diamond trick in dummy.

South spurns the opportunity to finesse by leading the king of diamonds at trick seven. In effect, he accomplishes a successful spade finesse by avoiding it.

DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X R
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
