Any doctor will tell you that Professor Hare, of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, is one of the highest authorities in the world on the action of drugs.

It is hardly necessary to state that cod-liver oil is the best remedy of all. The oil should be given in emulsion, so prepared as to be palatable.

He also says that the hypophosphites should be combined with the oil. Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil, with hypophosphites, is precisely such a preparation.

CHAPTER III.

Audine had not completed her toilet the next morning, when the door of her bedroom opened and Mrs. Neville came in. The child was surrounded by her play-fellows the companions of her life.

"Dear aunt Mary, good morning! I am making all the hair can be ready for breakfast—please don't wait for me."

"My dear, I am sorry to say that I have come to tell you that I shall be obliged to have you go to school."

"To school? Oh, where are you going?"

"To London. I have a note from Roger Girwood this morning."

"Mr. Neville is not ill, I hope?"

"Not yet; but Roger says he is overworking himself terribly. He neither eats nor sleeps, but is in a constant working state."

"I will see him before I go, Mrs. Parsons, but we will not wait for him now."

"I think I will go to him at once," said Mrs. Neville.

"The status stood in a sort of alcove, the light so disposed as to fall in sharp shadows on the marble floor."

Mrs. Parsons continued to speak, hardly giving herself time to breathe.

"I am sure it was time that you should come, ma'am, for me and master."

"We have been quite uneasy-like about Mr. Godfrey; he do not eat nothing at all, and looks more like a ghost than the gentleman he was, and he works awful."

"Is the status very beautiful, Mrs. Parsons?"

"A female it is, ma'am, very tall, and not so very much to be seen of her. She has a great cloak on, much as you might say, your waterproof cloak, and she is holding it up high over her head with both hands."

"The clock had struck eleven before Mrs. Neville and Audine found themselves again in their brougham on the way back to the hotel."

"I do so half like that Signor Castelletti," said Mrs. Neville.

"Nor I," said Audine; "there is a curious arabesque turn of the lips and eyebrows. Should he be a fellow of distinction. I could never be sure if he was a mere esprit mougeur or something of the kind."

"Hyperion to a satyr!"

"Did you admire the statue very much? It is curious that it should have a strong look of you, Audine. Mrs. Neville said this with averted head, looking out of the window."
