MARY HAWORTH Wife Cannot Understand Her Husband's Motivation

Dear Mary Haworth: I am sorry to hear that you are unhappy because your husband says could well be true. He feels, however, that she is going through a difficult adjustment and he can add something to her life, as she does to his. I love him dearly but my views on this matter are irreconcilable.

I take her to be an extremely unhappy neurotic, which my husband says could well be true. He feels, however, that she is going through a difficult adjustment and he can add something to her life, as she does to his. I love him dearly but my views on this matter are irreconcilable.

Dear A. W.: In your lengthy letter, when you mention that you are very sick, just home from the hospital, go to a prolonged convalescence with your husband, I would be surprised that you are not more and nobody else. Can you help us understand each other better?

This instance of flagrant irresponsibility and unconcern for the welfare of the child, obviously by continuing to first claim on the mother's love (if any) in time of illness, establishes the fact that the divorce is an inevitable, in any real sense, in her present state.

HOUSEHOLD HINT

Dates are always popular and can be served in many ways. Slip them into salads, add them to muffins, pancakes, waffles or cookies or keep some frozen dates on hand for nibbling.

Never leave colored garments standing in a heap after they are laundered as the color may run off on other clothes.

ELLEN'S DIARY

No Stars Lend Brightness From The Overhung Sky

"Well" Curiosity yawned while ago, climbing up to the roof, "this has been a quiet day." James is visiting at the house across the lane. He went along this evening's slippery path, lit by the flicker of a light. No stars lent their brightness from the overhung sky. The stars were tiny as the small ones, Alex and Peter are preparing to retire, to see him at their pre-bedtime play and come to their bed.

"Now, believe, you are a what!" Alex will question.

"A wabbit!" Peter will smile, and a spell of rest by his wicked-animal. And you'll hop, and I will try to catch "O.K." I will say drop to his knees.

"The firing of their play they will be well content to climb the stairs to prayers and, and a spell of rest by their mother from some chosen book.

Peter's prayer, mostly original is a touching petition, as are always those of such little ones. Trustful and sincere, it gives an older listener a deeper understanding of their verity written.

"Unless we become as a little child," innocent and ever-forgiving and sweet.

"It is a day like this that is an exceptionally good one." Curiosity observes now. "All day, the growth of the state room on an even keel. It sailed along smoothly, with nothing to both, and no touch of any ill wind of fate to ruffle the sea. And isn't that good? Yes. The day that will become as a little child." Innocent and ever-forgiving and sweet.
