THE PIRATE.

By Sir Walter Scott.

CHAPTER XII.

If the smell which was wafted from the chimney, & of Hugh-Westra up to the barren hills by which the mansion was surrounded, could, as Mistress Barbara opined, have refreshed the hungry, the noise which proceeded from thence might have given hearing to the deaf. It was a medley of all sounds, and all connected with jollity and kind welcome. Nor were the sights associated with them less animating.

Troops of friends were seen in the act of arriving—their dispersed ponies flying to the man in every direction, to recover their own pastures in the best way they could—such, as we have already said, being the usual mode of discharging the cavalry which had been levied for a day's service. At a small but commodious harbor, connected with the house and innlet, those visitors were landing from their boats, who, living in distant islands, and along the coast, had preferred making their journey by sea. Mordaunt and his companions might see each party passing frequently to greet each other, and scolding on successfully to the house, whose great gate received them alternately in such numbers, that it seemed the extent of the mansion, though suited to the opulence and hospitality of the owner, was scarce, on this occasion, sufficient for the guests.

Among the confused sounds of mirth and welcome which arose at the entrance of each corner, Mordaunt thought he could distinguish the loud laugh and hearty salutation of the sire of the mansion, and began to move more deeply than before, the anxious doubt, whether that cordial reception, which was distributed so freely to all others, would be on this occasion extended to him. As they came on, they heard the voluntary scoldings and bravura effusions of the gallant fidlers, who impatiently flung already from their bows those sounds with which they were to animate the evening. The clamor of the cook's assistants, and the loud scolding tones of the cook himself, were also to be heard—sounds of dissonance at any other time, but which, subdued with others, and by certain happy associations, form no disagreeable part of the full chorus which always precedes a rural feast.

Meanwhile the guests advanced, each full of their own thoughts. Mordaunt's we have already noticed. Baby was wrapt up in the melancholy grief and surprise excited by the positive conviction that so much virtuous had been cooked at once as were necessary to feed all the months which were clamoring around her—an enormity of expense, which, though she was no way concerned in bearing it, affected her nerves, as the beholding a massacre would touch those of the most indifferent spectator, however well assured of his own personal safety. She sickened, in short, at the sight of so much extravagance, like Abyssinian Bruce, when he saw the luckless number of Gondar harked by pieces by the order of Ras Michael. As for her brother, they having now arrived where the rude and antique instruments of Zeland agriculture lay scattered in the usual confusion of a Scottish barnyard, his thoughts were at once engrossed in the deficiencies of the one-stilted plough—of the triscar, with which they dig peats—of the sledges, on which they transport commodities—of all and everything, in short, in which the usages of the islands differed from those of the mainland of Scotland. The sight of these imperfect instruments stirred the blood of Triptolemus Yellowley, as that of the bold warrior rises at seeing the arms and insignia of the enemy he is about to combat; and, faithful to his high emprise, he thought less of the hunger which his journey had occasioned, although about to be satisfied by such a dinner as rarely fell to his lot, than upon the task which he had undertaken, of civilizing the manners and improving the cultivation of Zeland.

"Facta est alen," he muttered to himself, "this very day shall prove whether the Zelanders are worthy of our labors, or whether their minds are as incapable of cultivation as their peat-mosses. Yet let us be cautious, and watch the soft time of speech. I feel, by my own experience, that it were best to let the body, in its present state, take the place of the mind. A mouthful of that same roast beef, which smells so delicately, will form an apt introduction to my grand plan for improving the breed of stock."

By this time the visitors had reached the low but ample front of Magnus Troll's residence, which seemed of various dates, with large and ill-imagined additions, hastily adapted to the original building, as the successive proprietors appeared to each to demand. Beneath a low, broad, and large porch, supported by two huge carved posts, once the head-ornaments of vessels which had found shipwreck upon the coast, stood Magnus himself, intent on the hospitable toil of receiving and welcoming the numerous guests who successively approached. His strong, portly figure was well adapted to the dress which he wore—a blue coat of an antique cut, lined with scarlet, and laced and looped with gold down the seams and button-holes, and along the ample cuffs. Strong and masculine features, rendered ruddy and brown by frequent exposure to severe weather—a quantity of most venerable silver hair, which fell in unshorn profusion from under his gold-laced hat, and was carefully tied with a ribbon behind, expressed at once his advanced age, his hasty yet well-conditioned temper, and his robust constitution. As our travellers approached him a shade of displeasure seemed to cross his brow, and to interrupt for an instant the honest and hearty burst of hilarity with which he had been in the act of greeting all prior arrivals. When he approached Triptolemus Yellowley, he drew himself up as to mix, as it were, some shade of the stately importance of the opulent Udaller with the welcome afforded by the frank and hospitable landlurd.

"You are welcome, Mr. Yellowley," was his address to the factor; "you are welcome to Westra—the wind has blown you on a rough coast, and we that are the natives must be as kind to you as we can."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—After a perusal of the lengthy but flowery article of my pedantic friend "Tom," in to-day's EXAMINER, I find nothing that will necessitate a long reply.

"Tom" says that instead of his criticism of the Collegium being intended to bury that journal in oblivion, it was rather to render it his most invaluable assistance, to inviting the long column of editors (that he spoke of to such an extent in his first letter) into a controversy with him. Now, you, of the Collegium, can you imagine your loss? Here is, in his own estimation, one of the greatest men of the nineteenth century condescending to enter into a debate upon the merits and demerits of the Collegium. How patronizing! "Tom" says without "Dick's" assistance the Collegium will meet with success. Certainly it will. "Tom" would not have said so, only that he repented of his foolish way, and is now resolved to live in perfect harmony with that journal.

Now, "Tom's" two letters are thus: First, a result of a further scrutiny of the Collegium. Second, a hearty sorrow for having taken up the pen of a "critic," instead of that of a "plummy fellow."

"Tom" should never give a person advice by telling him not to carry his pretensions too far, for he has carried his too far, and we know what came of it. If he persists in keeping in public life, I suppose he will be found in the columns of the London Times or New York Herald (I was going to say the Spectator, but as Joseph is dead perhaps that journal is also).

The Smallest Bank in the World.

Among other things, Prince Edward Island can boast of what is probably the smallest chartered bank in the world. It is known as the Farmers' Bank of Rustico, and it is just what its name implies, a bank for the farmers of Rustico. The total paid up capital amounts to less than nine thousand dollars, the statement of the bank's liabilities and resources on the fourth of the present month, as officially published in the Canada Gazette, being as follows:—

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock ..... $ 8,211.56
Basis in circulation ..... 1,755.00
Due on dividends ..... 115.49

Total amount due from Bank ..... $ 20,112.26

RESOURCES.

Gold and silver ..... $ 850.35
Dominion and other bank notes ..... 1,743.00
Amount due to the bank ..... 17,805.70

Amount of the resources of bank ..... $ 20,408.05
Liabilities ..... 20,112.25

Amount in favor of bank ..... $ 295.70

The bank is largely co-operative and has usually paid a dividend, that for the last half year being at the rate of 6 per cent. The institution had its origin as follows: The community is largely French and a number of years ago there was placed in charge of the spiritual affairs of the people a priest of great foresight and energy. He took note of the great poverty of his parishioners and set about providing a remedy, forbidding premature marriage, the re-division of property within certain limits and providing for the removal of some to new districts where land was to be had in abundance. Among other enterprises projected for the purpose of enabling the farmers to carry on necessary improvements was the Farmers' Bank of
