50,000 miles to Canada Bridgless rivers, a near-escape from death, dysentery, and countless other hazards dogged Lou-Bette Herrick and Hilary Dunsterville during their three-year motor trek around the Americas. The adventure, which began merely as a summer holiday in Central America, ended as a round-trip drive of the Western Hemisphere: from New York to the southernmost tip of the inhabited world, then north to Alaska, across Canada to Quebec, and back to New York — a total of 55,000 miles. Hilary tells the story and Lou-Bette supplies the photos in this week's issue of Weekend Magazine. WITH THE EVENING PATRIOT MAGAZINE and Colored Comics STILL ONLY 10c
