A Celebrated Case.

That fact is superior to fiction (the old adage has it that truth is stranger than fiction) in illustrating human life—motives and actions—has just been exemplified by disclosures in a murder trial at Brussells, Belgium, some notices of which we have already given in the EXAMINER. But the affair has caused so much sensation at the immediate scene of the transaction, and such an amount of interest throughout Europe and America, that a summary of it may not prove uninteresting to our readers:—

On the 23rd of December a cablegram stated that Armand and Leon Peltzer had been found guilty of murder in the first degree and sentenced to death. The trial had continued for several weeks; and the whole investigation developed an amount of evil human passion, deceit, deception, plots, secret machinations, and covert proceedings, such as would put to blush the most sensational novel.

The principal characters in this tragedy were, a lawyer named Bernays, his wife, and Armand, Leon, and James Peltzer, the latter of whom however was not conspicuous in the affair. Bernays was a comparatively young, successful lawyer. He was wrapped up in his profession and money making, caring little for general society, or amusements. His wife on the contrary was flighty and sentimental, and the wife looked upon the husband as cold, stupid and commonplace. They, of course, disagreed and finally quarrelled. A year after marriage, they agreed to live apart, but under the same roof, to avoid scandal. Just at this state of affairs, Armand Peltzer arrived from Buenos Ayres, and engaged the acute lawyer on behalf of his two brothers, Leon and James, who were accused of fraudulent bankruptcy. Bernay's efforts were so effective that the brothers were honorably acquitted; and a warm friendship sprang up between Armand Peltzer and the lawyer, who introduced him to his wife. Peltzer soon became intimate in the household, and succeeded in apparently healing the difference between husband and wife, who were thus brought together again. Armand Peltzer was a man of fine presence and elegant address; and the contrast between him and Bernay affected the sentimental woman, and soon she and Peltzer were deeply in love with each other. Bernay's attention was called to this state of affairs, but he at first would not listen to the supposed gossips, and he permitted the intimacy to continue, until the governess or maid, who had charge of the Bernay's child could contain herself no longer, and denounced Peltzer and the wife to Bernays. A quarrel between the two men ensued, and Peltzer was forbidden the house. By some means Peltzer convinced Bernays that he was mistaken, and once more Peltzer was admitted to the Bernays' mansion, and entertained at a banquet of the household. Again a change takes place, the jealousy of the husband is aroused, and Peltzer is once more forbidden to enter the house, his letters returned unopened, and a challenge for a duel with Peltzer was unheeded by Bernays.

And now Leon Peltzer appears on the scene. After the trial mentioned, in which he was cleared of fraud, he went to New York and was earning a small salary as a clerk there. One day he received a mysterious communication from Brussels which he answered by a a cable message containing the words "Robert Fulton." He sailed for Europe, and after remaining in England, France and Belgium under various names and numerous disguises, hired a suit of rooms in Brussels. Returning to London he wrote to M. Bernays over the signature of Henry Vaughan, inclosing a retainer of $100, and asking for a confidential consultation in these chambers. The lawyer, easily entrapped, was shot with one of a choice assortment of pistols purchased in London and Paris and apparently tested by both brothers with a special view to noiselessness. The blinds had been closed, the curtains drawn, and all precaution taken to deaden the sound of the pistol shot. Leon Peltzer made his escape from Belgium without exciting suspicion that the name he used was an assumed one. Armand Peltzer remained all the time at Antwerp, and took pains to prove an alibi.

It seems that Armand, infatuated by Madame Bernays, and wishing to win her without delay, instructed Leon Peltzer, under the assumed name of Henry Vaughan, to write to the authorities at Brussels, announcing the death of Bernays, and where the body might be found, stated that he had shot the lawyer but that it was the result of an accident. This letter furnished the key whereby the whole dread secret was unlocked. The police have won much credit for the expert manner in which they unravelled the plot. It was at once shown that the letter of the pretended Henry Vaughan was in the handwriting of Leon Peltzer, who, instead of living in England as the date of the letter indicates, was arrested just across the border of Belgium. Armand, when questioned as to the whereabouts of Leon, said he was in England, posted letters to his pretended address, but the police adroitly discovered that he was telegraphing to Leon just over the border. One terrible incident was brought out at the trial. The mother of the two men was shown to have written the exclamation, on hearing of the arrest: "Two sons, two murderers! Armand has abused Leon's weakness, all for that woman!" The poor woman, after realizing the fearful purport of her words, denied that she uttered them; but it was proved that she uttered the words, and the exclamation did much to condemn her sons. Nearly two hundred witnesses were examined in the case, summoned from all parts in the New and Old World. A couple of the Chiefs of Police of London were on the stand for the prosecution.

Increased Steamboat Accommodation Required.

A VOICE FROM KING'S COUNTY.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—Public Meetings have recently been held in Prince and Queen's Counties to discuss the all-important question of Steamboat Accommodation for the Island. This is as it should be. In order that this Province may fully share in the prosperity brought about in other parts of the Dominion, by the National Policy, we must have increased Steam Communication with the Mainland.

Although residents of King's County are, at present, silent on the question, it must not be inferred that they are satisfied to remain in the background, quietly looking on, while the people of the other two Counties are fearlessly fighting for their rights. It will be remembered that, under the original contract with the Island Steam Navigation Company, King's County was not overlooked; but McIntyre and Davies—acting, no doubt, in the private interests of the latter—had the agreement altered, so that Charlottetown received an extra trip a week, while Georgetown was ignored altogether. A nice pair of representatives, indeed, were these, betraying, as they did in this, as in many other instances, the rights of the County they were elected to represent. Last session our representatives at Ottawa—McDonald and Muttart—succeeded, I am happy to state, in remedying the wrong to a certain extent, in consequence of which one of the Island boats called at Georgetown weekly during the past summer. Through their efforts also the Fishwick boats were subsidized to run to Murray Harbor Georgetown, etc. But, notwithstanding these increased accommodations, King's County is still far short of her rightful share of steamboat service. More steam between Summerside and Shediac, with daily trips between Charlottetown and Pictou, would be quite right, and nothing short of this will meet the present requirements of the country. But, in addition to this, more steamboat accommodation is required in sections of the Island unnamed at the meetings lately held. Is there no one prepared to say a word in behalf of the interests of King's County? Dr. McIntyre was in Charlottetown the evening of the meeting in the Market Hall. How happened it that his voice was not heard on that occasion? It is useless, however, to ask the question. For five long years he silently sat in the House of Commons, and his constituents have nothing to expect from him but a repetition of his former brilliant career.

All King's County expects is a fair share of the steamship service of the Province. The electors of the County should unite in asserting their rights. A Gulf boat should be placed next summer on the route between Pictou, Georgetown and Souris. The Local Government should be asked to subsidize a steamer to run between Montague, Cardigan, Annandale, Dundas and Georgetown, connecting at the latter place with the Pictou boat.

As the other two Counties have had their public meetings, King's County should have one too, to which the Representatives in the Local and Dominion Houses might be invited, and at which the bone and sinew of the County should speak out in no uncertain tones.

I remain,

Yours truly,

SENTINEL.

The Great French Remedy, Dr. LeDuc's Periodical Pills.

For the cure of Leucorrhœa or White's Excessive or painful Menstruation, Green Sickness, Falling of the Womb, Catarrh of the Uterus or Vagnia, Hysteria, Pain in the Back, or Piles, or for the purpose of invigorating and giving tone to the Generative Organs, two pills should be taken twice daily, or in very enfebled conditions, one pill three times a day. To effect cures in chronic cases it will be necessary to continue the use of the remedy for some months. A reasonable trial will create sufficient confidence in the remedy to insure its being taken until a permanent cure is effected.
