Priestley's "Eudora" Cloth

"Eudora," is the name of the new black dress fabric put upon the market by the Priestley's, whose famous dress goods are a household word all over the world. It is like their much esteemed Henrietta cloths; indeed, it has all their merits, and a few things which they lack. It is made in black only, it is a perfect dust shedder; has extra weight and width; and, fitting easily and draping gracefully it gives a distinction to the wearer which all of Priestley's goods confer. This is their excellence, which sets them apart from all other goods. "Eudora" is wrapped on "The Varnished Board," and Priestley's name is stamped on every five yards so that ladies cannot be deceived. 31

PATENTEES OVERCHARGE.

Their Great Mistake in Putting Fancy Prices on New Ideas.

A new article of domestic hardware has been put on the market which is a staple in all families and competes with a similar utensil which lasted for 15 and 20 cents. The price of the new article is $1. Before it can be in demand and generally adopted to the displacement of the old utensil, a great deal of work will have to be done, which is very much hampered by the prohibitory price put upon the goods. The number of persons who will be willing to pay the price of five for five of the old style goods for one of the new style, will not be large, we think, and a wiser policy would have fixed a lower price. This leads us to say, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, that every year there are large numbers of similar articles put on the market, which would have a large sale if they were sold at mercantile prices. By this we mean a consideration of the first cost of the goods when ready for delivery to jobbers, the jobbers' profit and the retailers as well added, for these things are considered by buyers, both wholesale and retail, before there is any demand for goods. Last year we went into a store where a filter was on sale. Upon asking the price of one of half a gallon capacity, we were informed that it was $20. It was a plain casting with no fittings or fixtures and with some porous material inside of it of no particular money value. The casting may have cost 50 cents, and an outside figure for the cost of the utensil would be $1, yet $20 was the price to the buyer. We demurred at the price and gave the same reasons for doing so that are given above, but the seller's argument in favor of the high price was that it would filter some fabulous number of gallons of water per day. This had no connection whatever with the cost of the goods; a frying pan will turn out 5 pounds of cooked material a day and a 25-cent faucet will permit thousands of gallons of water to pass through it daily. These are the functions of the article sold; they are expected to be efficient, but there is no reason for adding 2,000 per cent. to the cost of them.

The fact that articles are patented leads many persons to feel that the public expect to pay stiff prices for them, but we believe this to be erroneous. Nowadays those who have money to spend consider prices very carefully, and if they are unreasonable they simply go without the goods.

England Has a Community of Empires.

England leads the world in acuteness in finding out the better portions of the earth that are attainable and in her enterprise and energy in possessing herself of them. She has, quietly as it were, but apparently successfully, laid the foundation for another vast empire in Africa. It extends from the Cape of Good Hope to Lake Tanganyika and is as large as all Europe. Besides he valuable gold mines there, coal and iron have also been found in large quantities, and civilization is advancing in that region as rapidly as it did in California after the gold discoveries, so it is said. England is truly a wonderful nation. In comparison with what she has done in spreading her influence throughout the world, civilizing and leaving her impress on it and accumulating wealth, the achievements of Rome are almost commonplace. What is thus said of the empire of the Caesars might also be said in like comparison of England with the other nationalities, ancient and modern. While Russia, as the most conspicuous in the number, is a vast empire and alike impressive in its area and population, it has exerted very little influence outside of its own domain; not a tithe of what England has. England is indeed a great force, morally and intellectually, in commerce and manufactures, as well as a great power considered in her geographical extensions and military prestige. The British Empire is a community of great empires, of which the latest, but by no means least interesting acquisition is, as said, the vast area, as large as Australia, seized upon by her within the last few years in Africa. A striking illustration of England's comparative commercial supremacy is found in the fact that more than two-thirds of the world's commerce through the Suez Canal is carried on under the British flag and in British bottoms. England is the great caterer, the great banker, the great monopolist, the great coloniger, the great conqueror of the earth. What a picture of her colossal achievements is afforded in the mere grouping before the mind's eye of such children of her loins or brain as the United States, the Dominion of Canada, Australia, India, her new and vast African seizure, not including Egypt, and the countless islands of the sea over which floats the Cross of St. George as the sign manual of English supremacy.—Oswego Times.

An Anecdote of Suvoroff.

Marshal Suvoroff, when receiving a despatch from the lands of a Russian sergeant who had greatly distinguished himself on the Danube, attempted to confuse the messenger by a series of whimsical questions; but found him equal to the occasion. "How many fish are there in the sea?" asked Suvoroff. "All that are not caught yet," was the answer. "How far is it to the moon?" "Two of your Excellency's forced marches." "What would you do if you saw your men giving way in battle?" "I'd tell them that there was a wagon load of whiskey just behind the enemy's lines." Baffled at all points, the marshal cried with, "What's the difference between your colonel and myself?" "My colonel cannot make me a lieutenant, but your Excellency has only to say the word." "I say it now, then," answered Suvoroff, "and a right good officer you'll be."

To Sea in a Cockle Shell.

Robert McCulloch, the 19-year-old New York lad, who proposes to go to Queenstown in a 19-foot boat, will start to sea on Thursday morning in tow of the tug McCaldin Brothers. He is confident of hitting the Irish coast safely. He will sail his boat across under a mainsail, jib, staysail and a square sail rigged aloft.

The craft looks as if it might stand a great deal of heavy weather. It has a short bowsprit, tall mast and at present has high bulwarks.

At sea Captain McCullom will cut away the bulwarks to give the seas a chance to pour off the deck. His cabin is about as large as a packing box.

ARSENIC EATERS.

The Styrians Are Addicted to the Use of the Deadly Drug.

For many years the habit of arsenic eating by the people of Styria, a duchy of Austria, has been known to the scientific world. Travelers who have passed through Styria have come back with reports of this practice, saying that the people of that country were accustomed to taking a white mineral, which was arsenic.

That this was so was denied by many, who said that the mineral taken was nothing more or less than chalk. There was much discussion over the matter, and the subject proved itself of such interest and importance that scientific societies took the question up and investigated it, and it was pretty well proven that such a usage did exist, but not so widespread as it was generally supposed. Many physicians have gone there simply to investigate this practice of arsenic eating. While some of them have found out much about the custom, others have come away no wiser than they went, owing to the secrecy which exists among those addicted to the habit. As it is against the law to obtain arsenic without a prescription from a physician, of course those who do so are anxious to keep it quiet. There are also found among the peasants of Salzburg and Tyrol those who follow the same practice. In these regions several arsenic works are situated, and the only way the employees can stand the poisonous fumes is by taking the drug internally, at first in small doses and gradually increasing the dose until the system tolerates large quantities.

It is probably from these arsenic workers that the custom spread to others, principally the lower classes, as hunters, wood cleavers, stable grooms and charcoal burners. All forms of arsenic are taken—the pure arsenic, the red sulphide and the yellow sulphide, or orpiment.

The arsenic eaters begin with a dose about the size of a pinhead, and increase this amount gradually until they are taking a piece about the size of a pea.

The habit is generally begun at the age of fifteen and continued up to the ages of seventy and seventy-five. The users of hidri, as arsenic is known among the peasants, are generally long-lived people, but unless at the age of fifty they commence to gradually discontinue the use of it, they invariably die a sudden death, and the fact that death occasionally occurs from poisoning by hidri eating shows that even the Styrians are not invincible to the deadly effects of this drug.

The reason for this custom is asserted by some to be for their personal appearance, but the fact that the habit exists principally among the male sex disproves this. It is said by the peasants themselves that it is done to make them strong and healthy, and they really are a strong and healthy people.

Enormous quantities of the drug are taken by some of them. In one well-authenticated case the man, a manager of some arsenic works, took daily a dose of twenty-three grains, each dose large enough to kill several men unaccustomed to its use. Another strange thing about this case is, the man began it first by taking three grains, an amount which we would consider decidedly dangerous. On several occasions he attempted to leave off taking the drug, but was made violently ill, only to recover on resuming his usual allowance.—Washington Star.

Modern Warfare.

It is significant of the growing importance of electrical applications in modern warfare that an elaborate work has appeared on electrical advanced field illumination and its application in fortification work. In military movements by night various illuminating appliances have already been brought into partial use, such as fire balls, illuminating rockets, preparations of magnesium, etc., which are to be set up and kindled on eminences, or thrown out by the artillery. But these agents serve only for a short time, and for a very limited space. They are now to be supplanted and to a great extent superceded by the electrical projector. Powerful electric lamps may be placed either on the ground, on natural or artificial eminences, or may be fixed in captive balloons. A balloon can be sent up in the dark, and when it is at practically a safe height above the enemy's position, a flood of light can be projected downward, which will reveal the plan of hostile operations. It is found that in the illumination of arc lamps a tract of country and everything taking place therein assumes a very different aspect from what it might be by diffused daylight. For instance, troops in grey uniforms are very hard to distinguish, while on the other hand, the flashing of arms and of tools (when in use) comes out more distinctly than by day. The inequalities of the ground, if gentle, disappear entirely. Objects at sea are more readily perceived. Great attention is being paid to the protection of the lamp reflectors from the enemy's fire. On fortresses, projectors are to be guarded by armour-plating, and arrangements will be made for suddenly obscuring the lights, during which, if portable, they may be removed to a short distance to perplex the enemy's aim.—New York Times.

Great Men Not Happy.

It has been the same as a rule with all men who have played a distinguished part in history. Caesar was in no sense a happy man; Alexander did not achieve contentment and enjoyment; Napoleon was never free from entangling perplexities and pleasure-denying apprehensions. The cases in which greatness and happiness have existed together can be counted on the fingers of one hand. Washington should have been happy, considering the measure of his success, but we know that his life was embittered by the malice of his enemies. Lincoln desired happiness if ever any man did, but it is doubtful if he realized even as much as one day of it. The familiar aphorism, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," is applicable to conspicuous characters of every age. The things that seems to signify happiness are in reality a source of perpetual worry and difficulty. Wherever there is much power, there is corresponding danger and responsibility. The strain never relaxes, the time never comes when peace of mind is assured; the pack of trouble falls from the shoulders only in the last scene, as the curtain descends upon the completed tragedy, and history takes up the theme and calmly proceeds to specify its lessons of usefulness, either for emulation or for avoidance.

CAN THE HEART BREAK.

Physicians Say Not, Yet the Imagination Plays Sad Freaks.

Grief does not kill, and it is indeed very seldom that heavy sorrow causes death to any one when in a healthy condition. It is, however, very often the indirect cause of a death, either by bringing disease to a climax, or by rendering the sufferer more liable to its attack. If a man is convinced that his grief is more than he can bear, those who have studied the matter agree that, through the force of his own imagination, the man will actually die from a "broken heart."

The great Napoleon was killed by an internal disease, but it is supposed that it would not have been fatal had not his spirits been so depressed through exile and defeat. William Fitt, the orator, is said to have died from a "broken heart," caused by his great grief at the failure of his cherished hopes and plans. And there have been many other such instances in the history of this country. When plagues are raging in a town, statistics show that as many die from fright and imaginary causes as from the real epidemic, so great a hold has the fear of death on some people.

If a man is condemned to be shot, it has often occurred that on the word "fire" he has dropped lifeless, although, through accident or design, no bullet has in reality left the gun.

There is a queer case on record concerning the daughter of a celebrated French novelist, who was deeply interested in one of her father's stories. It appeared in installments, and the heroine was suffering from consumption. As the girl brooded over the sad fate of the heroine, she, too, suddenly manifested the same symptoms. A physician recommended her father to restore the heroine to health, which he did a few chapters on, and at the same time as the girl in the novel recovered, so also did his too sentimental daughter.—Philadelphia Times.

Crispi's Coat of Mail.

Premier Crispi, of Italy, it is interesting to know, has recently made preparations to defend himself against possible assassination. Ever since the last attempt upon his life this excitable prime minister has been in a constant state of alarm, and he fears a daggger or a bullet at almost every corner and upon every occasion. To ease his mind he has lately had made for him a coat of chain mail, such as the chevaliers wore in the middle ages, which he wears under his outer shirt.

It is very light, exceedingly solid and of double thickness over the heart. Its power of resistance is such that not only will it afford protection against the slenderest of stillettos, but a revolver bullet cannot penetrate it. In workmanship it is a beautiful piece of construction, and so flexible and easy to wear that it occasions no discomfort to the noted man who dons it. Probably it is the finest coat of chain mail ever manufactured, for it has all the improvements of modern armor combined with the utility and strength of the mediaeval metal garments.

The cleverest of the clever armorers of Naples (who, by the way, should henceforth be known as "Armor-suit Code") constructed it, and only charged the prime minister 600 francs ($120), marvellously low price for such a fine garment.—New York World.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided for our breakfast and supper a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

DIAMOND DYES

are the great favorites with the ladies for home dyeing.

Why they are Popular.

They are the easiest to use; they give the brightest colors; they make colors that last till the goods are worn out; the colors never crock or fade, and will stand soap and washing.

Ask your dealer for the "DIAMOND"; refuse imitations.

Sold everywhere. Direction Book and forty samples of colored cloth free.

Painless Dentistry!

TESTIMONIALS.

J E McDonald, D D S,—

The seventeen (17) teeth you extracted for me on Thursday, May 30th, at Doctor Robertson's, Crapaud, gave me less pain than I have suffered many times in having ONE taken out. I shall send all my suffering neighbors to you.

With gratitude yours,
MRS HUGH GILLIS.

Rose Valley, May 31, 1895.

Doctor McDonald, Dentist,—

Dear Doctor,—For two years I have been a constant sufferer from toothache, always in dread of having them taken out. Hearing of your success I determined to try your method, and now, after having you extract six for me, I can conscientiously say you are the only one who ever extracted a tooth for me WITHOUT PAIN. Truly yours,

MRS JAS DEVEREAUX.

McKinnon's English Ointment.

MR. NEIL MCKINNON,—

Dear Sir,—For five years I was a sufferer from eczema. Physicians could not help me. At last I bought a box of your Ointment, which helped me wonderfully, while two boxes made a complete cure. I can recommend it to all others similarly afflicted.
