CHAPTER XV

It was a specious argument, for it took no account of the flagrant exploitation that was going on, and which had nothing to do with the question of government. But Thurlow did not point that out. Strang had moved rather too quickly for him and as he had not yet made up his mind how to act in the matter, he took refuge in silence. He had no intention of precipitating trouble till he knew how to deal with it and he contented himself with listening to what the other had to say and maintaining a non-committal reticence.

His attitude emboldened the trader to continue, and in the course of the next hour he showed his hand even more clearly. His manner grew more assured, as he met with no opposition, and by the end of that period he had put his case in a manner which left Thurlow in no doubt whatever as to how things stood.

He allowed it to seem that he regarded the status quo as eminently satisfactory and suggested delicately that things might be made both profitable and easy for a resident who would be content to follow in the path of his predecessor. On the other hand he intimated, without actually saying so, that he would strongly oppose any attempt to reform conditions and he hinted that as the virtual ruler of the island he could perhaps make things extremely uncomfortable for the reformer.

It was skillfully done, for at no point did he actually make any promise or threat, and his tone throughout was purely conversational; but he had nevertheless made it perfectly clear that he was fully prepared to put up a strong fight for the wholly illegal powers he wielded.

"Naturally I wouldn't presume to dictate to you," he concluded with a genial laugh. "But I do honestly think that if you collaborated with me on the same lines that Person did we could run this show with satisfactory results. After all, I haven't lived here all this time without getting to know a good deal about the folk and now that things are running smoothly I'd hate to see them get unsettled again. You see my point, don't you?"

"Yes, I see that," Thurlow agreed ambiguously and he rose to his feet. "Well, I think I'll turn in now. I want to be up early in the morning if I'm to make a start before it gets too hot. Good-night!"

Back in his bedroom in the Residency he realized more clearly than ever that the arrival at some sort of decision was now imperative. Strang's move had brought things to a head and he must decide hether to throw in his lot with the trader or come out openly in opposition.

As Strang himself said in another connection, there was no middle way.

Mystery of the Island

The shadows were lengthening; they topped the last ridge and came in sight of the plantation, and Thurlow paused and wiped a sweat from his forehead before starting down the steep, scree-covered slope, at the foot of which the long, ordered lines of palms stretched away towards the distant blue of the sea.

Miami took advantage of the pause to sit down on an outcrop of rock and roll herself a cigarette. She completed the operation deftly, and then held out the tin in which she kept her tobacco and papers.

"You smoke?" she suggested. Thurlow was staring out over the sea of gently-waving palm fronds below, and he shook his head, without speaking. The girl struck a match and lit her cigarette.

Wednesday evening, after a three weeks' visit in Montreal, where there she was present at the marriage ceremony of her son, Mr. Ronald James Wood and Miss Estelle O'Neill of Montreal.

Georgetown and Vicinity

Miss Margaret Wood of Charlottetown was a recent guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Wood.

Miss Anna Mae Gardner and Miss Alice Fitzpatrick of Montague were visitors on Saturday, 16th, to Georgetown, where they were the guests of Mrs. Annie Gardner.

Mr. Robert Saville of Fortune was a business visitor to Georgetown on Wednesday, May 20th.

Friends of Mrs. Harvey Blackett are sorry to hear that she is a patient in the King's County Memorial Hospital in Montague, and all wish her a speedy return to good health.

Mr. Jack Hemphill of the Royal Canadian Navy, stationed in Halifax, N. S., is visiting Mrs. Hemphill and family in Georgetown.

Mrs. Edith was a visitor to Charlottetown on Wednesday, May 20th. She was accompanied by her son, Joseph, who will enter hospital for treatment.

A local resident, Mr. Michael Martell showed indignation when, failing by the ordinary trap methods to catch a large rat, which had some time had frequented his site, and then looked up at her companion's face.

"Tell me, 'Turlo, what will you do when you have seen all of Ararat," she asked abruptly. "Will you make a picture of it?" "A picture?" he repeated, without removing his gaze from the distant horizon. "Oh, I suppose you mean a map? Well, I might."

"It would be a good thing," she said thoughtfully. "In a book Strang gave me there are pictures of other islands. There's New Zealand and Australia and America and England—and even Asia. But there is no picture of Ararat. Strang said that Person was going to make one some years ago when he was not so old and fat, but all the time I knew him he liked you more than making pictures. So then it was too late. When you are old, I think you will like gin too. All white men do."
