THE FISK JUBILEE SINGERS of Nashville, Tenn., will give two concerts in the Masonic Temple on Tuesday and Wednesday evening next, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. THE EREMA.—The barkentine Erema, Capt. Nelson, arrived here yesterday afternoon from Bridgewater, England, with a cargo of limestone. The Erema left on March 22d, and arrived at Cape April 14th, twenty-four days from Bridgewater. She has since been detained by the ice. On April 24th, in lat. 43 deg., 49' one of the crew, Thomas White, a sailor, while engaged at work, fell from the rigging and struck the rail of the ship and was killed. He fell overboard and was lost. White belonged to Bristol, Eng., and was about 45 years of age. It was blowing a heavy gale at the time and nothing could be done to rescue him. The Erema was slightly damaged by the ice in the straits, and the pumps had to be kept going for a time.

SCHOOL BOARD MEETING.—The regular monthly meeting of the City School Board was held last evening. Dr. Johnson, chairman, and John Egan, Esq., were absent on account of indisposition. The questions of the supplementary estimate and re-adjustment of the salaries of teachers, on account of the late amendment by the Government to the School Act, was considered, but action was deferred until the next meeting of the Board. It was ordered that the teachers be notified that their engagement with the Board terminates at the end of the present term, and those wishing to re-engage should apply before that date. The Board granted the use of Prince Street School Hall for the summer School of Science, which is to be held in July next. The total enrolment for the month of April was 1,364, an increase of 12 over the previous month. The percentage of attendance was 88, and the daily average 1,156.

A Visit to Jackson Park After the Fair. (Special correspondence of THE EXAMINER.) It was a strange impulse, I think, that moved me to visit the scene of the World's Fair a few days ago. To people in general, the very idea would have been repugnant. No, no, however, to me the visit was, to me, a most interesting event.

As I made my way to the Park of undying memory, I prepared myself for grudging experiences and startling surprises. I kept well in mind the vision of the glories of the Fair as they appeared in its zenith, and, once again, I tried to live in the myriads of strange fancies of the Midway Plaisance. So far I was able to do so, I heroically struggled to obliterate the interval of time that lay between "then" and "now." The elevated railway hurried me along to the entrance to the Park in much the same businesslike manner as when, in an agony of expectation, I wended my way thither for the first time. But the number of passengers was noticeably less. Nor was there the same hectic excitement, the impatient and impetuous study to be handled by the ever-vigilant conductor.

My curiosity to see the White City after its glory had departed was due, in some measure, to the fact that I had seen in the newspapers of the first that had taken place there. And, then, I was prepared to find little within its walls but a heap of blackened ruins. A view of the site would have been enough to satisfy my curiosity, and the railroad terminus the first object that I saw upon my way to the Ferris Wheel. Then, soon afterwards, the minutest and most insignificant details of the various classes against the eternal background of the sky, only they lived yet. We are now at last within the once-chaunted and charming precincts, but how changed the scene. My first sensation was that I was gazing upon the streets of a city of the dead. And a deep gloom seemed to settle upon one's spirits. No foot paced those spacious streets but that of a sad-visaged policeman, who seems sorrowfully about with his lantern under his arm, threatening the safety of no one. The only sound I heard was the chopping of a solitary axe which seemed to proclaim with every chop that there is a time to build and a time to destroy.

But a few months before, those magnificent buildings looked upon the fairest scene in history, and had a share in it. Representatives of every nation under the sun, from the remotest of the world's pinnacles and towers, bravely fluted their country's flag. To-day the only bit of hunting to be seen was, appropriately enough, a small American flag which pertinaciously asserted itself as representing the glory of that nation which had made the World's Fair possible, over one of the smaller flags. A peep at the inside of the building revealed to the eye a scene of complete desolation. It seemed as if some savage monster of herculean strength and gigantic stature had placed himself at the head of a destroying army, whose hosts had poured a torrent of vengeance upon a scene once so glorious and magnificent. Here was ruin complete and universal.

Visitors to the fair will remember the view from the Court of Honor. It was without a doubt, the most beautiful to be had anywhere in the grounds. To-day they would find the Perryville gone, leaving no trace behind it, save charred columns of exquisite finish, fragments of stucco, and half-consumed timbers. The stately group at the head of the lagoon has yielded its beauty to the stern influence of the winter weather, and will soon be recognized, in the famous statue of the Republic. Welcoming the Nations remains as before. The lagoon, whose waters were a source of delight to the thronging multitude of last summer, and across which glided the hair-like pinnacles of the Ferris Wheel, has lost every shred of its beauty. Around the beaches are strewn bits of paper, cigarette boxes, and other refuse, which excrete a most disillusioning effect on one's mental spirits.

The bridges, too, have undergone serious changes, and some of them have crumbled to pieces. The ground, in various places is thickly strewn with bits of the battle-like pinnacles or fragments of the gondola, has lost every shred of its beauty. Around the beaches are strewn bits of paper, cigarette boxes, and other refuse, which excrete a most disillusioning effect on one's mental spirits.

The work of destruction in the Midway Plaisance is almost complete. The pleasure haunts of the celebrated avenue have all been entirely obliterated. Bungalow Castle and the Java village were in a good state of preservation. A note attached to the latter reminds visitors that the property has been sold and an office near by. Be-

What Kossuth Did. His real life work was over with the Crimean War, which he helped to bring about. One of his biographers, writing immediately after his death, sums up, not unjustly, the work of his life: It has sometimes been asked what Kossuth did for Hungary? He has raised the public spirit; produced confidence in the nation's cause; he has asserted the ancient Hungarian right of liberty of speech and of meeting; he has reformed the abuses of a privileged class, and roused them to a sense of their responsibility; he has roused the people to a sense of their rights, and he has carried a quantity of taxation, abolished by law the immunity of the nobles to pay taxes; he has reformed the "privileges of the various classes; he has stimulated trade and industry and awakened a proper spirit of emulation among the artisans and merchants; he has established savings banks, railway companies and many other institutions for the benefit of the people. He has raised the social position of professional men; he has carried the law by which the peasant was made a free citizen, and by which serfs were transformed into freeholders; he has stimulated trade and industry and awakened a proper spirit of emulation among the artisans and merchants; he has established savings banks, railway companies and many other institutions for the benefit of the people. Water Drinking in Typhoid Fever. In the March number of the "Revue de Medecine" Dr. Hector Maillart, of Geneva, concludes an article on this subject. As a result of his study of it, he feels convinced that the treatment of typhoid fever by copious drinks may be recognized as a better method. In order that the treatment may be beneficial, the patient should drink at least from five to six quarts of water daily during the whole febrile period. As it is not possible to do this in the treatment of typhoid fever, the use of copious drinks may be recognized as a better method. In order that the treatment may be beneficial, the patient should drink at least from five to six quarts of water daily during the whole febrile period.
