ELLEN'S DIARY

Alderlea Mourns The Loss Of Another Great Woman

"This is the prettiest morning, Ellen!" James offered in the dawn surveying the world about from that window of our bedroom which overlooks the mill set in the low of the valley.

Once too the millpond was there, in summery seasons to indicate the trend of the weather ahead. Now in its place the stream flows, and dividing before it reaches the dam, finds the two spillways through which to drop before rejoining presently to continue down between wooded banks, and be lost at length in the tidal waters of the river below.

"Yes, pretty!" James said, "the sun rising—and all so peaceful and calm."

Peaceful—that it came to mind, was how she had gone "far ben", the woman whose funeral some of the family were to attend this afternoon.

"She just slept away", one of her neighbors wrote us—"went yesterday morning in her sleep."

This was the fond and kind (maternal) grandmother of two boys, in their chosen professions now divided by that distance which leaves one in the far Canadian West and the other across the sea in London, and both far from their parents' farm—our girlhood home by the Strait.

She was an attractive lady. Not old as years go, and up to her illness of few months' duration ever youthful in spirit. She was smallish and fair—and kindly.

Especially, we recall, to those often overlooked in this busy bustling age: the stranger, the

Mrs. Catherine Moreside Celebrates 100th Birthday

People from near and far are extending best wishes to Mrs. Catherine Moreside on the occasion of her one hundredth birthday on January 22nd, 1959.

Mrs. Moreside was born in Wheatley River, the second oldest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Allan MacDonald.

In 1891 she married Mr. James Moreside of Milton, where they farmed successfully until his death in 1912. They had ten children which were born in Milton. The family consists of six sons and four daughters. One daughter died in early childhood.

The remaining members of the family, George and Ben reside in Vancouver, B.C., John and Lorne in Tuberos, Sask., Kenneth in Winslow, P.E.I., Mrs. Sarah Ford, North Milton, Mrs. Evelyn Hop, and Reagh on the old homestead with whom she is now residing.

She has 24 grandchildren, 26 great grandchildren, and four great-great grandchildren, also two sisters, Mrs. Isabel MacNeill of Parkdale and Mrs. Sarah Webster of Cardigan.

It was on January 22nd, 1955, that the fifth generation of his family was celebrated.

Mrs. Moreside's health through the years has been good and even yet she is able to be about every day and interested in the routine affairs of the day. Her impaired eyesight is her only drawback, this keeps her from participating in her favorite pastimes of reading and knitting.

Mrs. Moreside has lived a long and useful life always concerned for the needs of her family and for the welfare of others.

Her kindly gracious manner and hospitality is remembered by all who have known her and who now extend to her best wishes for continued health and happiness.

Life Is More Fun Now Than In The Good Old Days

Ruhamah S. Frank

"Back Home Again" in New York, I shall think with pleasure of the changes for the better that have come into the lives of the men and women of P.E.I. More particularly I shall be glad of the richer lives of the women since naturally I have observed them more closely. Not everyone will agree that the changes I shall mention are "good" but I shall never believe that poverty and constant frustration are character-builders; that they make for kindness and understanding—or strengthen the individual in any way.

Too often the very poor—with the worries attendant on that condition—become embittered and envious (understandably so) and so weakened by their joyless lives that they fall where they might have achieved with better fortune. There are, we know, exceptional people for whom neither extreme poverty nor severe physical handicaps have been a barrier to a good life.

TRAVELING

Government benefits (family allowances, old age pensions, etc.) and more wide-spread prosperity generally have brought to many more women satisfactions known in the past to only a small number. Traveling, for instance, perhaps the traveling isn't extensive enough to "broaden their horizons" but it is a delight to women who never had enough money or ease of mind to go beyond the Island.

I remember the Island woman who waited with me in Toronto on an extremely hot evening for a much delayed plane. I voiced my discomfort and impatience and wondered at her cool and relaxed manner. "Why should I bother with heat or such?" she asked. "As long as I'm going somewhere all of it is fun."

DINING OUT

Not so long ago few women felt they could spare the money to have an occasional meal at a restaurant or hotel. In fact, many considered certain dining places "too swell" for them. On her birthday I once invited a neighbor to have lunch with me at the "Big Hot.L." She refused saying she didn't feel well-dressed enough to enter such a fine place. How different things are now.

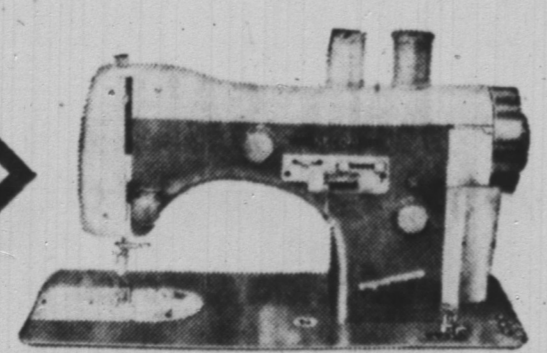

may seem vain and trifling things on which to spend time and money but I am glad to know that the self-confidence and pleasure they bring (rightly or wrongly) are far more widely distributed among Island women now than in the past.

IN THE OPEN

Island women are no longer forced to restrict their activities to their homes, or to exert their influence in community affairs through their husbands. Yet I do believe they are just as devoted wives and mothers as were their mothers in the past. And—with that added richness of family relationship (I believe) that a more open and equal partnership with their husbands can bring.

One of my dearest friends was a gentleman who kept a grocery store—one of those stores now fast disappearing. He told of the group that had such fun around the cracker barrel every evening. But there was no woman in the group. "I used to hear them laughing and talking," my friend's wife told me, "but I

Home Economist To Visit On Prince Edward Island

"Many housewives in the Maritime Provinces are missing a fertile field for the preparation of appetizing dishes by not exploring the opportunities for culinary achievement offered by the many species of fish caught in the salt waters almost surrounding the Maritime Provinces."

This is a message from Mrs. Johanne Zwicker McKee, the Home Economist for the Department of Fisheries for the Maritimes area. Mrs. McKee will be on Prince Edward Island during February conducting demonstrations in many areas throughout the province.

The aim of the Consumer Service in the Department of Fisheries is to increase the consumption of fish in Canada. This is done through an education programme, in which consumers are taught how to buy good quality fish, store and cook it properly, and serve it attractively. The Department of Fisheries maintains a test kitchen in Ottawa where fish recipes are tested, created, and assessed, with the help of volunteer taste panels. These recipes are then compiled in booklets for distribution to the public on request. Articles, recipes and photographs are sent to daily and weekly papers, and magazines for publication. Film strips are also made for the use of the Home Economist in illustrated lectures.

In addition to the Home Economists in the Ottawa Kitchen, there are Fisheries Home Economists in six centers across the country, who bring this information directly to the consumer, by giving demonstrations to student groups, women's organizations, or to individuals or associations concerned with public or institutional feeding. These centers are Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal, and Halifax. The newspapers, radio and television are used to help increase the general knowledge of the public about the nutritional qualities of fish, its versatility and use in daily menus. Awareness of these facts, should lead to a resulting increase in the consumption of fish in Canada.
