Isaiah Horne's Famous Remedies.

MR ISAIAH HORNE.

Dear Sir,—My son strained the muscles of his arm some time ago, and suffered violent pain until treated with a rubbing of your Magic Discovery, which gave relief at once. Also my other son struck his knee against a log and it pained him so that he could not sleep. He got out of bed and rubbed his foot with the remedy and fell asleep and was all right in the morning. I think it a grand liniment.

Yours truly,

ABOUT LABOUCHERE.

THE EDITOR OF LONDON TRUTH IN HIS SANCTUM.

Personality of a Very Remarkable Man—His Course in Parliament and His Methods as a Speaker and a Journalist—Some of His Opinions.

C. Frank Dewey writes as follows from London to the Chicago Inter Ocean:

"I really could tell you nothing particular about myself," was the brief message the busy member for Nottingham, editor of London Truth, and literateur, Henry Labouchere, sent in answer to my inquiry. On the following day, however, I called on him by appointment, for in busy London everything must be done by appointment.

No. 5 Old Palace Yard is within the precincts of Westminster—I might say, inside the Parliament buildings, with but a step for England's enfant terrible to cross over.

I am told he is the first to arrive and the last to leave the House.

In St. Stephen's ancient quarter every house bears the stamp of age, and Mr. Labouchere's palace is a typical example of that class.

The "knocker" admits into a large octagonal foyer, under a cupola of vari-colored glass. The most conspicuous ornament in this large, bleak, chilly, stone-floored hall is a large wooden chest, old enough to have been King Lear's steamer's trunk, and an iron box as black as the gates of the tower. In another minute I was ushered at once into the presence of the famous parliamentarian, wit and lobbyist, whose keen-edged words have frequently caused heated discussion and many a heart ache in the sacred circles of Mayfair.

It's a truly old-fashioned parlor in which we are sitting, with a high ceiling, low window and glass doors.

An uncommonly large fireplace, more fit to be on a Texas ranch, emits a volume of heat into this spacious room, which, on account of repairs going on in the other parts of the house, serves the three-fold purpose pro tem. of parlor, reception-room and library. The modern Juvenal reclines negligently in a big arm-chair, and rests his feet on the iron fender.

Mr. Labouchere is perfectly self-possessed, some call it blase, but I prefer the former expression. His large head sits well on the stocky frame, and from under the thick eyebrows the rather small but piercing luminaries look positively, always steadfastly, and in moments of animation snap savagely.

If the face is a study there is nothing attractive in the cheap smoking-jacket, over a pair of bilious-colored trousers and shiny boots of no particularly cut or style.

Mr. Labouchere loves to display his forehead. It is broad and full, and particularly copious over the eyes. Nor is there much poetry in his expression.

He is an idealist. Neither melancholy nor vacillation has found admittance into those hard lines about the mouth. The eyelids are baggy from late hours, and possibly from much anxiety, but indomitable courage is traceable in the distended nostrils. Those hard cheeks and the grimly-compressed lips are not given to frivolous merriment. His is a cold laugh—a distant smile, tinged with satire, which reverberates his speech.

Mr. Labouchere, as I have said, is perfectly self-possessed. He prefers to employ every moment of his life's fickle stay to some practical purpose, and his occupations are many.

Notwithstanding our animated conversation, he went on cutting the pages of a new book sent him for review; how soon he'll cut the author, the next number of Truth may tell.

Occasionally he looks up with an ambiguous smile, seldom with confidence. "Do I believe in interviews? Certainly not," and he emphasizes the negative with an unmistakable cockney accent. "Why did you come to see me? You might have written anything and saved yourself the bother. A good journalist has no need of the principal; it's wasted time. Write any thing pertinent to the subject; shape it so as to suit your readers; who cares? And if the interviewed party were to say a lot of things, the journalist would only repeat that which suits the purpose. Therefore I think it advisable to write the interview in the editorial rooms."

"But, Mr. Labouchere," I interrupted, "surely this cannot be your serious opinion; neither would you practice it yourself."

"Well, no; but then we edit Truth—and nothing but the truth," and Mr. Labouchere permitted one of those abbreviated smiles to illumine his cynical face.

"The fact is, we must not always practice what we preach," he went on. "Consistency is too stale, in a sense. The modern world requires acid, spice, and all piquant sauces of scandal and fiction."

"My opinion on the House of Lords? It is useless to repeat," and he pulled himself up in the rocker. "I am irrevocably opposed to it. We do not want an unnecessary evil, and the days of legislators by divine right are past.

"You have a tolerably good system of government, but deficient in practice. I daresay your improvements have kept apace, else your eagle would hardly scream so loud.

"But I will let you invent the rest of this interview," and he lit another cheap cigarette, of which he appears particularly fond.

As the time went on, however, Mr. Labouchere became a trifle more loquacious. "Oh, yes! I recollect that interview at Lake Como two years ago. I was rusticating in Tuscany, so was Hurlbert. I did the smoking and Hurlbert wrote the interview. Do I recollect the contents? Certainly not, nor do the publishers" (with a pull at his pointed beard).

"Hurlbert is a good fellow, but that interview will hardly survive his fame."

To my question how he managed to edit such an interesting paper and participate in almost every question in Parliament, he replied: "Mental discipline and physical training is the secret of my success. I eliminate all useless questions, and grasp the opportunity by the forelock, as Socrates would have said. I never get mixed, nor do I feel a lack of resolution. My course is clear, and from which I seldom deviate. Of course I am not without assistance," and turning about I saw at the other end Mme. Labouchere at her desk assorting a stack of letters and manuscripts.

In a moment I divined the secret of his success, for Mrs. Labouchere has become as clever in literature as she used to be on the stage.

At nearly three score years of age this modern Juvenal has established a name in London's history, and next to the late Mr. Parnell is the most feared man in Parliament as well as in society.

He understands how in an eminent degrees to interest members of the highest aristocracy, often reaching up to the Queen's own circle, who serve his paper with social gossip, which, under his facile pen, assumes piquant and interesting form.

In Parliament his satire and keen-edged wit has often pierced the opponent's shield, and although he may lack originality his criticism is often logical and almost always feared.

Of course, Mr. Labouchere is somewhat of an egotist; but he is entitled to a reasonable amount of self-adulation, for he is the architect of his own fortune, having attained to present eminence in society, letters and politics by sheer industry, courage and originality.

From a simple clerkship when a young man of twenty-four, he became a partner in a famous London firm, and about twenty years ago embraced journalism and politics. At a period when England's politics was divided by legion of irreconcilable questions—from Disraelian Imperialism to Gladstonian Liberalism—Mr. Labouchere entered the latter's triumvirate, and no one appeared stancher in support of England's G. O. M. than the editor of Truth.

On the whole Mr. Labouchere is a lively and energetic man for an Englishman, and if he has a habit of getting into trouble he has also a happy knack of getting out of it.

For instance, the other day, after he had printed an important piece of news about the proper way to cook crawfish, and a humane reader of Truth expostulated with him about his advice to the cook to cut the live fish in halves, he retorted merrily by expressing the opinion that it is ridiculous sentiment to treat creatures of low or rudimentary organization as if they had the same susceptibility to pain as a human being, and settled the question finally by telling an anecdote about an angling friend of his, who once "caught a perch foul."

"The hook pierced the fish's eye. My friend felt that he had not caught the perch according to the rules of the game, so, to compensate him for losing his eye, he put him back into the water He then baited his hook with the eye and went to work again. Within three minutes he caught the same perch again with his own eye."

This is a capital fish story. I haven't heard a better tale in a long while. It is a lie, of course, but all fish stories are, and it has the merits of originality and humor. I like Mr. Labouchere the better for such harmless fibs.

TOO MUCH NUTRIMENT

There is Danger in Over-Eating—Too Much Meat May Produce Cancer.

Over-eating is generally condemned on the ground that by stuffing the digestive organs or by giving them too much work to do the food taken is prevented from properly nourishing him who takes it. It is possible, however, that one may suffer from too much nutriment as well as from too little, even when it is properly assimilated. We quote from Modern Medicine, January, a few remarks embodying this view, which will be to most persons a new and even a surprising one:

"Some years ago Sir William Roberts, the eminent English physiologist, called attention to the fact that one of the greatest dangers of our modern civilization is over-nutrition through excessive alimentation. As a remedy, Dr. Roberts advocated the use of alcohol, whereby, according to him, an undue and dangerously accelerated nutrition might be inhibited, so to speak, by producing a mild form of indigestion. The remedy proposed is, to the writer's mind, highly objectionable; nevertheless, the fact stated is a patent one. The gout and rheumatism, which have been shown by Savory to be well-nigh universal in England, are certainly due to the excessive consumption of nitrogenous material in the form of roast beef and other meat dishes.

"Bradbent, the eminent authority on cancer, also attributes cancer to the too free use of meat. He asserts that the excessive use of meat generates an undue power in the epithelium, which, in consequence, grows in instead of out, crowds upon and chokes the weaker structures beneath, and reaching the lymphatic channels, travels along them to the lymphatic glands. Here the neoplastic cell obtains a firm foothold, and takes on so extensive development that cancer is the result.

"Dr. Lamb, an eminent English physician, many years ago recommended a vegetarian regimen as a means of combating cancer, and reported so many cases that were favorably influenced thereby, that his treatment was adopted by his famous contemporary, Dr. Abernethy.

"In a recent article Dr. Waugh asserts that he is convinced that excessive meat-eating is a cause of cancer. More than one eminent physician has ascribed cancer to the free use of pork. The relation of diet to chronic maladies is a subject which affords a most promising field for observation and experiment."

Heat and the Eyes.

The fact appears that there is a very marked difference in the way temperature is borne by the eyes when it is below 200 degrees Fahrnheit and when above that heat. Up to such a degree a man can look at the metal in a furnace with comparative ease, but before it reaches 3,000 degrees he is compelled to wear colored glasses.

Saving Waste.

For the privilege of picking out rags, bones, bottles, tin cans, etc., at the various dumps, Italian contractors pay to the city of New York about $80,000 a year; from which it is inferred that if there were a complete system for the separation and collection of these articles in the houses where they are discarded much more would be recovered. Mr. Waring, chief of the New York Street Cleaning Bureau, thinks it safe to assume that "with a universal and well-regulated collection and sale, there might be recovered, in cash, one cent per diam for each member of the population, beyond the cost of collection and sale. This would amount annually to over $7,000,000, enough to pay all the cost of street cleaning and street sprinkling, and, in addition thereto, to repave the whole city within a very few years, so far as this is needed, and to keep the pavements in repair perpetually." It is stated that a large amount of solder is obtained by sprinkling old tin cans with coal oil and firing them in a kettle. Tin from scrap tin plate is obtained by placing it in a solution of sulphate of copper, which dissolves the tin in the state of sulphate, while at the same time metallic copper is deposited. In the presence of the iron the sulphate of tin is decomposed in turn with the setting of metallic tin at liberty and the formation of a solution of copperas. In reality, it is found that the solution of copper corrodes the iron and detaches the tin that is fixed to it. Beneath a double bottom, upon which the tin clippings are arranged, there collects a mixture of tin and copper, which is separated, or which is utilized directly for the manufacture of stanniferous brasses or bronzes.

Painless Dentistry!

This is addressed to all those who are suffering from TOOTHACHE, or who may require treatment of any kind at the hands of a Dentist. I make the very best Teeth, guaranteed, for $15 00 a set. If not satisfactory money refunded. Gold and Silver Fillings a specialty.

The following letter from Dr Robertson of Crapaud, as regards the Painless Extraction of Teeth, speaks for itself:—

To J E McDonald, D D S, Summerside, P E I.

Dear Doctor,—I am so well pleased with the work you have done for me that I will take it as a special favor if you will give publicity to this letter. I positively assert that after an experience extending over twenty-two years, under the hand of many dentists, you are the only one who ever extracted a tooth for me Absolutely Without Pain. The TEN teeth you removed for me at one sitting did not hurt a particle, as Mr James Dawson of Tryon, who was present at the operation, heard me testify. The man who invented your method should be knighted.

I am yours, gratefully,
H W ROBERTSON, M D.
