(James Pendergast)

The writers and purveyors of tradition and gossip of the present era seem to lean heavily toward the flamboyant and sensational. They almost rival the exploits of the famous dare-devil and world traveller Baron Munchausen (Muncoosen), or the fabulous Irish giant Bill McCool.

If a snow storm, tornado or disaster takes place in the world the alarmist very often makes it appear 100% worse than it really is. Some apostles of gloom (pre-dry day Jeremiahs) seem to take a morbid pleasure in spreading the grim tidings, beating the "tom-toms", bush telegraph or common everyday gossip. If a person should happen to get sick or badly injured the gloomy prophets report that he or she is destined for the other world very soon.

Nor is the present day alarmist attitude peculiar to the Holy Polloi of this era. Human nature is basically the same all the time. Scientists and archivists have come to that conclusion.

In older days—before the advent of the telegraph, telephone and radio, the public were more susceptible to false rumors and alarms. They appeared to go in cycles. Perhaps the commonest one was "the end of the world" at some particular date. That hoax was a hardy perennial. One lady four-flusher in England manipulated the rumor in such a manner that by selling special seats she reaped a good sized fortune. Some of the gullibles tried to recover the money by law, but their case was declared "ultra vires" or some legal term befitting the situation. They had gotten a quid pro quo (fair barter). A case of Empor Cavet (let the buyer beware). Eyes for your bargains.

The great intellectual giant and historian Lord Macaulay predicted the fall of the British Empire about the year 1825 on account of low moral standards, but the reign of Victoria changed the schedule. The international situation is in a state of chaos and schism, full of rumors, hypothetical propositions, contraries and contradictions.

Russia has issued a release regarding the 20-year friendship pact with Britain and France. It was a peculiar sort of friendship, a case of armed neutrality. The Soviets can't be trusted. They are set on world domination by fair means or foul, similar to their counterparts in earlier history, viz., Attila the Hun, Genghis Khan, Napoleon and Hitler and previous others. The free nations seem to be pursuing the only feasible

The negotiation through (and with) strength, although there is a considerable discrepancy in some of their individual statements at times. Britain appears to be willing to let the Chinese Reds have Quemoy and Matsu islands. The U. S. has made no positive statement of what it intends, if the Reds attack. There is far too much "Cultus Wah-Wah," (no good talk). President Eisenhower had to take his high admiral to task for talking out of turn. Eden and Eisenhower preserve their composure and diplomacy in all critical occasions.

Mr. Lester B. Pearson made a statement two weeks ago tantamount to: "If the U. S. is at war, Canada will be at war." Then last week he said publicly that if the U. S. took part in the defence of Matsu and Quemoy that Canada would not (necessarily) be a partner. The explanation and distinction is a delicate one—and rather ambiguous.

It must be mystifying to most people in the Free Nations to figure on the motives behind the printed broadcast of the improving and perfecting of hydrogen bombs, atomic bombs, air to air guided missiles, radar screens across Northern Canada, etc., etc. There must be some motive animating the military tycoons—"method in their madness." We can only guess. It may be to put the fear of death into would-be aggressors which would be a summation devoutly to be wished.

In World War II, inventions and secrets were really secret. The atomic bomb was being perfected for three or four years before it was dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. It wasn't even mentioned at the secret conferences at Yalta, Casablanca, Tehran or San Francisco, although President Franklin Roosevelt knew it. The military expedition and landing at Casablanca was another well-kept secret. Armadas of warships and transports were outfitted at Atlantic ports and in Britain thousands of helpers knew that a very large force was going somewhere—none but the top brass knew positively. The American and British were timed to meet off Gibraltar. It was one of the many gigantic undertakings of the long and cruel war. The destruction of the big cement dam in Germany by British bombers who had rehearsed in England for months was another secret exploit. There is an awful lot of what used to be called "yellow journalism" and "gingols" 50 or more years ago.

Those "gingols" are war-mongers—consciously or unconsciously. They nearly drummed up a war between Britain and the United States in 1895-96, over the Venezuelan boundary dispute. There was high tension. The famous "Monroe Doctrine" was cited by leading American jingoos and was misinterpreted and misconstrued. If memory serves right Sir Julian Pauncefote was British secretary of war and John Hay was U. S. secretary of state. They got heads together, calmed the hot-heads, made compromises and a peaceful settlement. Some years later Britain and France were on

MRS. DANIEL G. CANTELO

The death occurred at South Rustico Pinette on Wednesday, March 16th, of Mrs. Daniel G. Cantelo at the early age of fifty-one years. She was born at North Pinette, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. John D. MacDonald. Although in poor health for the past few months it was hoped that medical skill and tender nursing would restore her to health, but God willed otherwise and on the above mentioned date called her Home to suffer no more.

In her passing the community has lost a valued friend and neighbour but it is in the home her loss will be felt most keenly as a devoted wife and mother.

She leaves behind her a large family of children and grandchildren. Her funeral was held on Friday, March 18th. A short service in the home was followed by service in St. John's church, Belfast, at 2.30. Despite travelling conditions friends came from near and far to pay their last tributes of respect to one they loved. Both services were conducted by the Rev. D. A. Campbell, who brought words of comfort to the bereaved family. Hymns sung were: "The Lord's My Shepherd"; "In The Sweet Bye and Bye"; and "Abide With Me." The Pall-bearers were: Luther Hubley, Fred Hubley, Lloyd Morrison, William MacKenzie, Kenneth Morrison, and Murdoch G. Morrison. Interment was in the Belfast Cemetery. The following were the very beautiful floral tributes:

Besides her husband she leaves to mourn the following sons and daughters: Harold, Boston, Mass.; Alton and Earl at home; (Doris) Mrs. Murdoch L. Morrison, North Pinette; Jean and Barbara at home. Also two grandchildren two brothers: John A., North Pinette; and Norman, Dartmouth, N. S. A brother Daniel predeceased her in 1953. Her aged step-mother is also left to mourn.

FLUORINATION?
There seems to be some ambiguity about the term "fluorination" as applied to the adulteration of water with the chemical element called "Fluorine"—or is it Fluoride?
Webster's College Dictionary defines "Fluoride" as a "compound of fluorine with some other element, or radical. (A fundamental constituent of a compound). If the water is fluoridized (or fluorinated), people will want to know with what other basic constituent the fluorine has been compounded.
If pure fluorine has been mixed with water, the word "fluorination" ought to be sufficient. "Fluoridization" certainly implies some other element. Our chemists and laboratory men could clarify the situation quickly if they had the time and inclination. The proportions of the announced mixture are a bit indefinite, viz., one part fluorine to a million parts water. One would expect some definite weights or measures. Then again, a thirsty hard working man perspiring freely will drink twenty times as much water as the white collar man. Hence 20 times as much fluorine in his system. Let us bide-a-wee.

Unemployment Insurance For Fishermen Is Planned

OTTAWA, (CP)—The government plans to bring Canada's fishermen under the benefits of unemployment insurance — if it can possibly be done.
Labor Minister Gregg made that promise in the Commons Tuesday as he piloted through the first reading stage government legislation that will make broad changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act.
He said the government has been studying the matter for months and these studies will continue. He hoped a solution might be found to include fishermen "whether it comes within the field of unemployment insurance, under some special measure administered by the department of fisheries, or is a combination of both."

Maritime members long have urged the government to extend unemployment insurance benefits out-of-work fishermen. The government has said the difficulty of including them lies in their complicated employment conditions. Some work only part-time at fishing while others own their own boats and work for themselves. Self-employed persons now are outside the scope of the act.

Mr. Gregg's statement was overshadowed by the main parliamentary business of the day—Finance Minister Harris' presentation of the 1955-56 budget, which occupied the whole night sitting. Mr. Harris announced an average 10-per-cent reduction in income taxes, some corporation tax cuts and other concessions.
First Commons reaction came from J. M. Macdonnell PC—Toronto Greenwood, financial critic for the Progressive Conservative opposition, who said the budget got away from realities and did nothing for the unemployed or those on fixed incomes.
He will resume the budget debate after the Commons returns from a 12-day Easter holiday, starting after today's half-day sitting. The Senate also will begin a 26-day Easter recess.

RAISE BENEFITS

Labor Minister Gregg's unemployment insurance amendments will raise top benefits for those out of work to $80 a week for married and $25 for single persons. The maximums now are $74 and $17.10. It also increases to $57 from 48 the earnings for top benefits.
Other changes being made include making a permanent part of the act provision for increased winter supplementary benefits approved by parliament as an emergency measure last January.
George Nowlan PC — Annapolis-Kings, J. W. Noseworthy CCF—York South and Harold Winch.

CCF—Vancouver East said said government amendments to the act do not go far enough. Mr. Nowlan said fishermen should be included while Mr. Noseworthy said the federal government should take full responsibility for unemployment.
