Defence Dept. Annoyed Over NORAD's Proposals

By DAVENPORTSH
OTTAWA (CP)—The defence department is becoming an enemy with North American Air Force Command Headquarters for advocating adoption of a NORAD intercept plan. The reason is that the Lockheed YF-12A also known as the A-11 or SR-71, was designed and built as a successor for the F-4E spy plane.

The Canadian government officials said, wants nothing to do with a plane which might be used for spy flights over Russia. NORAD is a joint Canada-U.S. command.

NORAD headquarters said Oct. 2 after the first public demonstration of the 2,000-mile-an-hour YF-12A, the plane "was designed to provide an effective defence against the manned bomber threat throughout the NORAD area of responsibility."

This was the first Ottawa head was that the big jet was intended as a NORAD intercept plane.

RESISTING PRESSURE
And NORAD's attitude came just at a time when the defence department is resisting pressure from the aircraft industry to buy an expensive plane intended primarily as an intercepter.

Informants said Defence Minister Heller plans to recommend to the cabinet, probably next month, purchase of a comparatively inexpensive tactical fighter whose primary purpose will be air support of the army in the field.

This would leave sufficient funds—within a defence budget of $1,530,000,000 a year for five years—to purchase a second Army equipment and new ships for the navy.

What is apparently worrying the defence department the most at present is the cabinet might decide on acquisition of an expensive jet plane to aid the aircraft industry and the economy generally.

The Canadian government in 1950 experienced some embarrassment concerning the U2 spy plane which was shot down over Russia.

It turned out that U-2s had been flying over Canada and that one had made a forced landing in Saskatchewan. However, it was stated that the U-2 flights were made for Canada mainly to take air samplings to determine whether there had been secret nuclear tests in Russia.

The government said the interests of the Canadian financial community.

He said that the government already has the "power of life and death" over insurance companies, trust and loan companies and that the new legislation would lessen the flexibility of the companies.

The bill provides for stiff fines and possible jail terms for company directors who knowingly allow the sale of shares to non-residents beyond specified limits.

The limits for non-resident shareholding would be 25 per cent of issued shares held by all non-residents and 10 per cent of any one non-resident corporation or individual alone or in association with others.

The present bill, which Mr. Gordon intends to have referred to the Commons banking and commerce committee following second reading, covers Canada insurance, trust and loan companies. A bill to cover banks is to be introduced later.

Mr. Nowlan, speaking in the House on the 26-page bill introduced by Finance Minister Gordon last month, said he doubts the legislation is in the interests of the Canadian financial community.

This hand may not make much sense, but it does have an amusing side. It first appeared in the 1930's in one of Ely Culbertson's books when he was at the height of his fame as a bridge player and showman extraordinary.

The bidding was about the same as would be today. The opening heart lead was standard, and returning the king back South with the queen and West had a genuine groan when he realized he had the missing ten.

If East had the ten, the heart suit would be blocked if he

Restrictions On Sales of Shares Draws Criticism

OTTAWA (CP)—Conservative financial critic George Nowlan said here the government's proposed new limits on the sale to non-residents of shares in Canadian financial institutions take away the "age-old right of private property."

OUR BOARDING HOUSE MAJOR HOOPLE

ANY WORD, MR. CHASE, YOU DO HAVE A DRILL WAY OF EXPRESSING YOURSELF. THE ROOM MAY BE A BIT COMPACT, BUT THE LAST MAN I REMEMBERED TO BE RECALLED WEDGED GUTTON, WAS VERY SATISFIED UNTIL HE ROLLED OVER IN HIS COUP AND BROKE HIS ARM ON THE WALL OF THE DOORBELLS.

MEANWHILE, THERE'S THE DOORBELLS.

THE KING AND QUEEN OF clubs were called, after which a low diamond from dummy was played to declarer's nine. The jack and ten of clubs were cashed as dummy contributed both spades. Dummy was now down to only diamonds, the A and K.

South led a diamond to the king, not bothering to cash his last club. He reached the ten and five of diamonds.

On the last trick dummy played the ace of diamonds and South played the ace of clubs. West played the ace of hearts.
