Burma's Military Gov't Plans Socialist State

By PETER BOOG

RANGOON (AP) —Burma's military government, which seized power one year ago, has attempted to spell out its plans for a new socialist state in an obscurely phrased, 10,000-word document.

Labelled the Philosophy of the Burmese Way to Socialism, the document promises to set up a classless and prosperous society in which justice will prevail.

It raps Communist nations for devoting too much attention to materialism and too little to men's spiritual needs.

Couched in Marxist terms and laced with religious phrases, the document appears to:

1. Commit the military to a socialist policy.

2. Use Buddhist teachings to drum up public support for its revolutionary policies.

3. Recognize the working class as the dominant force of a socialist society.

IMPLEMENTS POLICY

Having stated its philosophy, the government moved to implement its socialist policies. In rapid succession it nationalized all imports and exports, all rice trading and all private banks.

The government also announced that in the near future it would nationalize all rice mills, the internal rice trade and all private industries.

"The surest way to establish our socialist goals in the shortest possible time is through total state control."

Observers here feel the document represents a victory for the left-wing group within the military. This group of socialists wants complete nationalization of trade and industry. They want collectivization of farms and "trade through cooperatives," modelled on Communist lines.

USES BUDDHISM

The military has not hesitated to use Buddhist concepts to back up its socialist theories. While stating that religion should be kept apart from politics, the document goes on to say that "in encouraging the will and initiative of the people their spiritual life must not be neglected."

In this context the document bitterly attacks the ideology of Communist countries. The West has always been a favorite whipping boy of Burmese socialists. But the attack on the Communist bloc is unprecedented.

The document condemns the "so-called" leftists of the eastern bloc for their "vulgar materialism," which supports the idea that "matter matters most." This dogmatic view, the document says, pays scant heed to the spiritual needs of man.

These countries have nullified the meaning of man, spurned his spiritual values and restricted his progress, the document charges.

The document then goes on to define its ideology in regard to the question of class and the class struggle in Burma.

In a socialist society, the working people are the determining force. So are the socialists, who guide the working people. In this type of society, there is no scope for industrialists, bigtime businessmen or the petty middle class. The document says these reactionaries, enjoying the profits of labor, must be eliminated.

Veteran Steamship Official Is Optimistic Over Future

HALIFAX (CP)—A man who has worked for more than 50 years with a world famous steamship company is optimistic about the future of ocean travel despite stiff competition from airlines and an appreciable decline in immigrant traffic from Europe.

Thomas G. Miller, general passenger traffic manager for the Cunard Steamship Company in Canada, told a meeting of Nova Scotia travel agents here that although his firm had in recent years received some severe blows, the tide now had turned. Passenger traffic last year was well ahead of 1961 and already this year bookings were going very well.

Mr. Miller, who joined Cunard as a boy in Liverpool, England, is on a North American business trip that may be his last before retirement next year. He begins his journey in the Maritimes, crosses Canada and goes down the west coast to Los Angeles. He returns to his Montreal headquarters via the U.S. mid-west.

"I'll be talking all the time," says the veteran steamship official, "telling people about all the new services we are offering. For instance our two new passenger ships Carmania and Franconia converted at a cost of over $3,000,000 each from former Saxonia and Ivernia incorporate features that will raise many an eyebrow.

"British ingenuity has got to work, and will enable us all to swim in the middle of the North Atlantic in an open air swimming pool in everything but the worst of weather.

HEATED BY RAYS

"Each ship has a new lido deck. Around the swimming pools will be glass windscreens and the whole area within this will be heated by infra - red rays."

The general passenger chief says that Cunard this year will inaugurate "an entirely new service to the Mediterranean. The tickets will enable passengers to travel to Europe by way of the Mediterranean and return via Rotterdam or a British port.

"This year too, we will be extending our services to Southampton onwards to Rotterdam on the continent . . . Rotterdam will be our European turnaround point," Mr. Miller says.

He also explained an arrangement with Trans-Canada Air Lines and British Overseas Air Corporation.

"We are also issuing tickets in conjunction with TCA and BOAC for round - trip air - sea passage to Europe. Go by air and return by sea," he says.

LIKED HALIFAX

The Cunard veteran says the five years he lived in Halifax during the Second World War "were some of the busiest and most fascinating years of my life."

"I have always retained a great admiration for the people of Helifax, for the wonderful job they did during the war years," he says.

Mr. Miller's 50 years with Cunard span many evolutions in transatlantic travel.

The shipping companies made North America," he claims. "They scoured Europe for passengers, they got the people here. It was a hard, tough, competitive business with a strong admixture of romance with the heady wine of empire building."

"But today it's not the emigrant traffic that's the big thing any longer . . . it's luxury cruising," says Mr. Miller. Even the good old Queen Elizabeth herself did three trips down to Nassau from New York this winter—her capacity now is 2,300—a far cry from the wartime 16,500."

Mr. Miller has been in Canada since 1904. He served 10 years in Cunard's Winnipeg office, 19 years in Toronto and divided the rest of the time between Halifax and Montreal.

He plans to retire to an island in Lake Ontario with a small boat, a duck hunting gun and his memories.

Opening lead — king of diamonds.

The nationally televised show Championship Bridge, now in its fourth year of weekly broadcasts, has produced many a sensational hand. Here is one that had the audience hanging on the ropes.

It was the final deal of the match between the Texas pair of John Gerber and Paul Hodge, and the New York pair of Harry Fishbein and Lee Hazen, all internationally known experts. The New Yorkers had accumulated a lead of 730 points, going into this deal.

Hodge opened with a spade and Fishbein overcalled with four hearts. Gerber bid four spades and Hazen five hearts.

Hodge bid only five spades, though he suspected his side might have a slam. He realized that making five would win the match, since that would give his side a score of 750 points, counting the honors — enough to eke out a 20-point victory.

However, Fishbein bid six hearts and Gerber six spades. Hazen and Hodge passed, putting the decisions squarely up to Fishbein. He chose to double, and that was the end of the bidding.

Hodge had no trouble making all the tricks, and scored 1,960 points on the deal to win the match by 1,230 points.

No one will ever know what would have happened if Fishbein had chosen to bid seven hearts instead of doubling. He might or might not have been doubled, or else Hodge Gerber might have gone on to seven spades. But if Fishbein had bought the hand at seven hearts, doubled or not, he also would have wound up with thirteen tricks!

The deal emphasizes the all-important power of distribution. Here was a case where each side had 20 high-card points, and yet they could each score a grand slam by buying the contract. It just goes to show that you can't put too much faith in point count when the distribution is highly unbalanced.

East had 5 points and North only 2, but each player at the table was void of a suit—and that made all the difference.

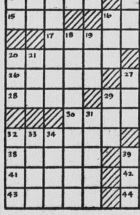
Yesterday's Answer



DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X B
is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
